"POTTAGE" CRY OVER LEASE WAR

Boston will sell her birthright for a mess of pottage, declares Joseph B. Eastman, secretary of the Public Franchise League, if she allows the fifty-year lease of Boston's subways and tunnels by the Boston Elevated Railroad.

"It is a preposterous legislation," asserts Mr. Eastman.

Mass meetings have been called for a protest against the bill, which was reported yesterday by the Committee on Street Railways and Metropolitan Affairs.

The Andrew Square Improvement Association has started the ball rolling for a public agitation of the question. Under the auspices of this association a mass meeting will be held in the Municipal Building at Upham's Corner on Monday evening. Members of the South Boston and Dorchester associations will be present. Daniel J. Chapman, president of the Andrew Square Association, will preside.

Mr. Eastman adds that it is time to begin to think about government ownership if that bill is allowed to become law. "The committee could not have given the matter consideration which so important a matter deserves, and if their action stands they will have offered a better argument for the initiative, referendum and recall than words can produce."

Mr. Eastman's Views.

Mr. Eastman says in his interview:

"The bill reported by the Street Railways and Metropolitan Affairs Committee is preposterous legislation. The majority who favored it must be laboring under some serious misapprehension. They cannot have given the matter the consideration which so important a public question deserves. If their action stands they will have offered a better argument for the initiative, referendum and recall than words can produce.

"If private monopolies need the sort of encouragement which this measure offers it is time to begin thinking of government ownership. The bill would give the Elevated rights to the same old routine one, for nearly half a century, of the public ways, which are the key to the whole transportation situation. The subways and tunnels are nothing more than public ways; they are public property, underground streets built for the benefit of all the people, not for the Elevated only.

"No public service monopoly in Massachusetts has been given rights which remotely compare with this. No other street railway, gas or electric light company has any contract rights in the streets at all, such less sole and exclusive rights. Its locations could be revoked at any time without even paying compensation. Competing companies could be given the right to use the same streets wherever the Legislature so desired. Their protection lies not in contract rights, but in the good sense of the people of Massachusetts, and a wise public policy.

People Not Pirates.

"It is absurd to claim that the Elevated needs such rights as this bill proposes for the protection of investors. The stockholders of the Elevated, most of them Boston residents, are not pirates, nor anarchists. They have no desire to wreck property nor destroy credit. They will treat public service corporations not only fairly, but generously, so long as those corporations serve them well, whatever their tenure or rights.

"Perpetual franchises are discredited all over the country; no one defends them, yet fifty-year sale and exclusive grants are, for all practical purposes, the same thing. We have not yet arrived at the level of omniscience where we can safely fix public conditions for two generations in advance by contract. The same controlling reasons which led Governor Crane, in 1901, to veto the bill giving the Elevated a lease of the Washington street tunnel for forty years apply to-day. The time has not yet come, and never will come, when Massachusetts can wisely go into the business of tying the hands of the next generation. Nobody knows what the conditions in Boston will be twenty-five years from now, or can determine the best way in which those conditions should be met.

ELEVATED WOULD BUY LEASE FOR 'MESS OF POTTAGE'

Joseph B. Eastman, secretary of the Public Franchise League, says:

"If Boston gives the Boston Elevated Railroad a fifty-year lease for the sole and exclusive use of her subways and tunnels she will be selling her birthright for a mess of pottage. The bill reported by the Street Railways and Metropolitan Affairs Committee is preposterous legislation. The majority who favored it must be laboring under some serious misapprehension. They cannot have given the matter the consideration which so important a public question deserves. If their action stands they will have given a better argument for the initiative, the referendum and the recall than words could produce."

ROOT PLAN IS OPPOSED BY TAFT

The Boston Chamber of Commerce had received a telegram from President Taft in which he declares that he is opposed to the Root amendment to the reciprocity bill. The President's telegram is as follows:

"White House, June 10, 1911.

"Geo. S. Smith, Pres. Boston Chamber of Commerce.

"I am opposed to the Root amendment, but I am obliged to admit that its adoption is not a violation of the agreement made with Canada. My views on the subject are contained in my speech at Chicago on June 3, a copy of which I am sending you.

"W. H. TAFT."

This telegram came from the President in response to the following one from the Chamber of Commerce:

"Considerable uneasiness herein refer ence to your attitude regarding the Root amendment. We wish you would send the Boston Chamber of Commerce an explicit statement of your position, in order that we may support you. Are you opposed to the Root amendment?"

It was signed by George S. Smith, Henry M. Whitney, Frederick P. Fish, Robert Lincoln O'Brien and Bernard J. Rothwell.

FLYERS FALL 6,000 FEET TO DEATH

JOHANNISTHAL, Ger., June 10.—Herr Schendel, who Tuesday established a German altitude record of 6,594 feet in an aeroplane, fell last evening with his mechanic, Voss, and both were instantly killed. Schendel was trying to eclipse the world's altitude record with a passenger. The aviator, who was piloting a new glinner, arose in a Dorner monoplane and had reached a height of 6,650 feet when a cannon was fired on the aviation field to announce the end of the day's competition.

A moment later the monoplane was seen to assume a vertical position. And it is believed that Schendel was trying to glide to earth with his motor shut off. Once, for a brief space of time, he seemed to have righted the machine, but a gust immediately he again lost control and the monoplane shot to earth with terrific speed, landing just outside the aviation field.

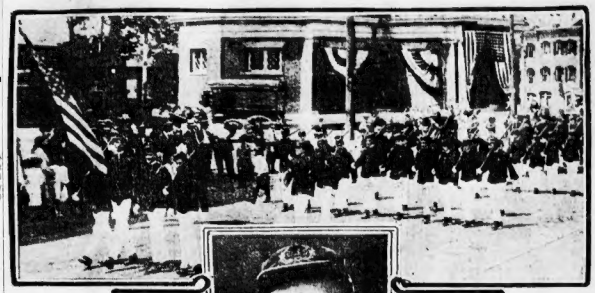
Dorchester School Cadets Passing In Review



THREE HELD FOR SEA MURDER

A startling tragedy of the high seas in which Captain Charles D. Wyman of Parker's Head, Me., was murdered in his bunk on the Philadelphia & Reading railroad coal barge, Glendower, within sighting distance of Minot's Light, was revealed to-day through an investigation by Boston police and Medical Examiner George B. Magrath.

Three men were arrested for the crime. They were the only men except the victim on the Glendower when the crime occurred, which was some time yesterday afternoon. The prisoners were brought to Boston to-day. Each one denied all knowledge of the murder. Their case will eventually go to the Federal courts. The prisoners are:

William DeGruff, a hunchback, with long, powerful arms and enormous hands.

He was the cook. He is from Gloucester, but had a room at No. 84 Clark street, Boston.

Antonio Priskich, a donkeyman, of No. 2614 Richmond street, Philadelphia.

William Nelson, a deckhand, of No. 2514 Richmond street, Philadelphia.

Captain Slain as He Slept.

Captain Wyman was murdered while he slept. His assassin crushed his skull with some heavy instrument. He beat him with merciless fury until every vestige of life had gone. The skull was crushed like an eggshell. There were sixteen or seventeen wounds.

The police who boarded the Glendower searched for a weapon with which the brutal deed could have been done. But they found nothing. They looked carefully through the bunks of the three men arrested and found a pair of light trousers that appeared to be spattered with blood. It was said these trousers were found in the cook's galley.

No motive for the murder could be learned. All three of the men agreed that there had been no quarrel with the captain. They said that they had plenty of good food. And they all declared that the captain was a good fellow and that it was a deep mystery how he was killed.

Dr. Magrath, with a wide experience in

The first heat prostration of the local hot wave was that of Horace Towle, an eight-seven-year-old resident of Worcester. He was stricken in memorial square, Dedham. He fell to the sidewalk, cutting his forehead. He was sent home.

When the mercury began to climb after day-break a scorching day was predicted. It grew hotter and hotter. The westerly wind is the trouble-maker. It wafts the atmosphere of the torrid west over this section.

All Greater Boston was glad that the hot wave started on a Saturday, when a half-holiday and Sunday to come would give a rest from work.

By noon there was a steady travel to the beaches. The State bath houses at Revere and Nantasket looked for a rush of business. The municipal baths did the same.

Soda fountain clerks were kept busy all day. There was no rest for the lemman.

CHAMBER ANNOUNCES LIST OF TOURISTS

The Chamber of Commerce has announced the complete list of those who will go on its forthcoming trip to Europe. The party number 104 persons, 78 of whom will sail from New York Saturday, June 17, a week from today, at 10 a. m. on the Cunarder Carmania. Twenty-six persons will meet the party at different points in Europe.

GREENFIELD ROBBER SUSPECT IS CAUGHT

GREENFIELD, June 10.—Several thefts and petty burglaries perpetrated in this town are believed to be explained by the arrest at Turner's Falls of Frank Avey, who claims Woonsocket as his home, and who, it is alleged by the police has made a confession. Avey, the police say, came here Wednesday night, and soon after his arrival robbed the Daniels homestead on Silver street, where he secured a large amount of jewelry.

A crowd of 20,000, one of the largest of the season, will be on hand when Joe Wood toes the first ball in this afternoon's battle between the Tigers and Red Sox at the Huntington avenue grounds.

The demand for tickets at the downtown stands this morning was almost unequaled in the history of Boston baseball. The combination of an ideal day and the Detroit-Tigers as the visiting team is drawing the entire army of Boston fans, who will pull their hardest for a victory over the leaders of the league.

According to the calendar, this is merely Saturday, the tenth of June. That's all the calendar says about it, and it's easy to see that the calendar don't know much.

A glance at the American League scehdule will tell you that this is the first day of Detroit, 1911. It's the day Boston has been waiting for these many months, the day of days in the Boston baseball season. Therefore—

Put on your new straw bonnet,
With the cute ribbon on it,
The pastime calls—we must obey;
You will find them all, pard,
At the Red Sox ball yard

FIND BODY IN FRANKLIN PARK

The body of a negro, declared to be a suicide, was discovered to-day near the Library Building in Franklin Park. The man's throat was cut. Medical Examiner Leary said that the weapon used was a razor.

The body was discovered just before noon in an infrequented section of the big park at the edge of Glen Road.

At first it was thought the man had been the victim of murder, but the investigation of the Medical Examiner dispelled this idea. There was nothing on the man's person to establish his identity.

COMMUTERS OBJECT TO CHANGE IN TRAIN

The commuters along the North Shore are now having a discussion with the Boston & Maine railroad officials in regard to the train service which the road is supplying in that territory. The chief protest is over the train which leaves Rockport at 7:36 a. m. which has for years been express from Montserrat to Boston in the morning, but which is now to stop at Beverly and Salem. Third Vice-President Frank Hoyt says that the train will reach Boston at the same time, 8:40 a. m., and that none will be inconvenienced by the two additional stops.

BALD EAGLE'S NEST FOUND BY 4 WOMEN

PITTSFIELD, June 10.—Four Lenox society women, members of the select Lenox Hiking Club, went on a twenty-five mile tramp to-day and created the walking record for the season. They walked to the top of Monument Mountain. The ladies' trains went in the precipice node famous by Bryant's poem, the gifted Indian maiden, who threw herself from the height to death, and there, securely lodged in a ledge, found a mud-headed eagle's nest, the first to be discovered in Berkshire for thirty years. Two eagles were guarding the nest.

RUNAWAY STOPPED BY MAYOR

Mayor Fitzgerald and Chairman Walter Collins of the City Council figured in an exciting runaway accident in Dorchester today during the parade of the Dorchester High School Regiment and saved a number of men, women and children from being trampled upon by two horses which had become frightened by the music of the bands.

The parade had reached the corner of Harvard and Washington street. Mayor Fitzgerald and Councilman Collins were walking in the front line as guests of the regiment. On the side was a two-horse team attached to a dump cart. The First Corps Cadets Band and St. Leo's Fife and Drum Corps started playing simultaneously and the horses darted toward the sidewalk, which was crowded with people.

Mayor Fitzgerald and Councillor Collins ran for the horse's head. Both grabbed for the bridle of each horse and subdued them. The parade, which had stopped, was resumed after both city fathers had received rounds of applause for their bravery.

Dorchester, 281 years old and more active than ever, held a celebration to-day that was more elaborate and bewildering in size and variety and brilliancy than any other Dorchester Day celebration written down in the annals of the old town.

John F. Fitzgerald, Mayor of Dorchester and incidentally chief magistrate of the parent city of Boston, was one of the busiest citizens in the country, being scheduled to take part in as many of the exercises as could possibly be crowded into a human program, and the other members of the committees that have had the affair in charge were equally occupied.

Even early in the morning until late at night there was entertainment on every hand for residents of Dorchester and their guests. There was not an idle moment in the day from the time the high school cadets assembled for their parade until the last dance of the municipal ball, that was a novel and attractive feature of the festival.

Events on Program.

Historical exercises, lawn fetes, speech making, baseball, track and other athletic games, a Marathon run, yacht races, Punch and Judy shows for children and free automobile rides, band concerts, fireworks, ball-

SPANISH TROOPS SENT TO PUNISH TRIBESMEN

PARIS, June 10.—The correspondent of the Temps at Melilla telegraphs that a clash had occurred between the Spanish troops and a force of tribesmen at Sent Arba Dekert. The Spanish losses were too men killed. The tribesmen suffered a loss of probably sixty dead. The Spanish troops were reconnoitring in force at Sent Arba Dekert when they were attacked. The Spanish commander has sent out a strong force with machine guns to punish the tribesmen.

HAVERHILL WOMAN KILLED BY TRAIN

GEORGETOWN, June 10.—Mrs. Annie Cook of Haverhill wandered on the tracks of the Boston & Maine Railroad at Middle street just before the arrival of a Newburyport train, and was instantly killed. Her head was severed from her body. The train was about forty years of age, married and is survived by two sons.

CAVALIERI WINS BIG TRIUMPH IN "SIBERIA"

PARIS, June 10.—Lina Cavalieri was enthusiastically tolded to-day upon her success last night when she appeared at the Grand Opera House as Stephana in the first performance at that theatre of Giordano's "Siberia." After the second act she held a little drawing room behind the scenes and was overwhelmed with congratulations. In the last act she was surprisingly dramatic. "Siberia" will shortly be produced in London with Cavalieri in the leading role. Owing to her English and Russian engagements the prima donna will be unable to appear next Fall in Boston, but she expects to sing again in America a year later.

DORCHESTER IN GALA GARB CELEBRATES ITS 281ST ANNIVERSARY

loon ascensions, open air meeting pictures shows, a flight by the Mayor in the aeroplane of Harry N. Atwood, the Roxbury aviator, and the opening of the new speedway with driving races were among the events on the long list.

The celebration commemorates the landing of the Pilgrims from the little vessel Mary and John on the shores of Savin Hill.

To aid the committees from the improvement associations and other organizations in making the day a success the city's public celebrations fund was drawn on to the extent of $3,500.

The first event of general importance was the parade and prize drill of the Dorchester battalions of the Boston school cadets. Assembling in the armory of the Dorchester High School under the command of Colonel William Brooks, and headed by the Boston Cadet Band, the cadets marched through Peabody square to Ashmont street, then to Ocean street and to Wolfe street, where the Mayor reviewed them from his seat.

Historical Society Exercises.

With the Mayor at their head the cadets then proceeded to Franklin Field, where the public was waiting for the marching company receiving a handsome State flag.

The cadets then paraded back to the school grounds, where they were addressed by Headmaster Lincoln, President Collins of the City Council and the Rev. Arthur Little. A luncheon followed, after which the boy soldiers dispersed to take individual part in other features of the day.

The most notable exercises of the day, from a civic standpoint, were those held by the Dorchester Historical Society. They were held this year in the William E. Russell school instead of on the crest of Savin Hill.

The exercises were preceded by the rededication of the statue of Edward Everett, which used to stand in the Public Garden, but which recently was removed to Dorchester and placed in the square named for Edward Everett.

The program at the school was as follows: Prayer, by Mayor Fitzgerald. President Richard C. Humphries of the society, and Deputy Superintendent of Schools Walter S. Parker. The presentation of forty prizes to the school children by the society, for the best compositions on Dorchester. A short history of Dorchester, read by Secretary John A. Forde of the society, and band concerts. Governor Foss was to be present. About 22,000 buttons were distributed to pupils of the public and parochial schools.

The committee in charge of the exercises was practically the officers of the Historical Society, who are Richard Humphries, president; James H. Stark, vice-president; John A. Fowle, secretary and treasurer; Thomas Temple, auditor; David L. White, Charles L. Cowing, James Wattles, Isaac L. Ripley, John B. Nolan and the Rev. George L. Cady, directors.

There was open house all day in the clubs and in many private residences and band concerts were provided morning, afternoon and evening in public squares and playgrounds. One of the most pleasing features was that of the Harvard improvement Association, which provided free auto rides for the children and kept its headquarters open all day and evening, furnishing entertainment and refreshments for the youngsters.

Taking Up the Mayor.

Spectacular events were not wanting, but the one that was perhaps the most discussed was one that was a late addition to the schedule for the day. Harry N. Atwood, the Roxbury boy, who has been racing his aeroplane all around Boston for the last few days, announced that he would fly from Squantum to Franklin Field and that at about 5 o'clock he would take Mayor Fitzgerald as a passenger in his new Burgess-Wright biplane. Crowds early began to drift toward the field to see the flight, although it is not the first time Mr. Fitzgerald has made a public ascension. Last summer during the aviation meet at Atlantic he was a passenger in the machine of Grahame White.

The Mayor's itinerary for the day covered a very full program, for not only was he scheduled to review the cadets, but he was also to throw out on the diamond at the Dunbar avenue grounds the baseball to be used in the championship game between the teams of Dorchester High and the High School of Commerce, to drive the first motor car over the new half-mile track at Franklin Field, to deliver speeches at at least one meeting, to appear at a lawn party this afternoon at his own home, and to lead the grand march in the municipal ball to-night.

Opening of Speedway.

The members of the Dorchester Gentlemen's Driving Club gathered in force at the opening of the track. Mayor Fitzgerald was to drive Ralph Wicks, President A. M. Johnson a trotter over the course. Before the opening of the track the members headed by the Boston Cadet Band paraded around the field in order of membership.

The opening card was one of the best racing cards ever put on at a local track. Such horses as Ralph Wicks, Nat Hoy, Cannelo, Krispen, Fly Boy and others of leading trotters were entered. After the race the members held a reception at their rooms in Washington Park Arcade.

Although most of the sports were centred at Franklin Field, there was no dearth of attractions in other parts of Dorchester. On the top of Mt. Ida, where the city soon to open a municipal playground, there is a special series of athletic games for children under sixteen, and the Richfield A. C., the champion amateur team of this locality, had a prize game scheduled with another nine site at the Locust street grounds.

The most notable track and field event is undoubtedly the ten-mile run arranged by the North Dorchester Athletic Association. An eight-lap track was built for it on Franklin Field and thirty runners, the best in this vicinity, were entered. Clarence Mac, the B. A. A. Marathon (Boston) Roldor; Con of the Brookline Gymnasium, Dean of Lynn and Joe Nutter of Roxbury were among the stars called to the scratch.

Hugh C. McGrath was in charge of the track and field sports and he succeeded in getting many of the best athletes to compete. The sprints and jumps, held inside the oval, included the 100-yard dash, the 220-yard dash, 440 and 880-yard runs, mile run and running high and running broad jumps. Oscar Heilburd of the Brookline Y.M.H.A., Bill Prout, R. F. Preble, Sam Lawrence and other Harvard athletes were down on the card.

The women of Dorchester were most interested in the lawn party in aid of St. Mark's Church of Ashmont, held on the beautiful grounds of the Mayor's estate in Welles avenue. The Mayor and Mrs. Fitzgerald arranged the party after a conference with the Rev. John T. Daly, pastor of St. Mark's. Preparations were made to welcome several thousand persons during the day, and the members of the parish had made elaborate arrangements for their entertainment.

Pop Concert on Veranda.

A pretty feature will be the pop concert on the veranda of the home of Mrs. Hickey till 10. Tables representing different sections of the parish will be arranged by Mrs. Fitzgerald and her two daughters and presided over as follows: Table 1, Mrs. Mannie J. Fish; Mrs. William J. Foley, Mrs. Joseph H. Devenney; table 2, Miss Grace Coleman, Miss Theresa Fleming, Miss Cecilia Sullivan; table 3, Miss Ella Heaphy and the Misses Kelly; table 4, Mrs. J. A. Riley, Miss Mary Murray; table 5, Miss Hoda Duff; Miss Agnes C. Curley.

Mayor Fitzgerald was at the head of the general committee, Miss Hoda Duff in charge of the grounds and the dancing platform, and Miss Grace Curley, John Hennessey, cane board; Peter Curley, wheel of fortune; William Reuter, African dodger, Frank Curley, 50 guess, running races, etc., William McCloskey.

Mrs. John F. Fitzgerald was chairman of the ladies' committee, assisted by her daughters and a coterie of women of the parish; Miss Helen Duffy and Miss Agnes Cotter were in charge of the Sunday School table, candies, cake; Miss Mary Brophy and the Misses Kelley, fancy work table; Mrs. Mannie Fish, Miss Mary Nutley, Mrs. J. H. Devenney, Miss Grace M. Coleman, Miss Theresa Fleming, Miss Cecilia Sullivan, Mrs. J. A. Reilly and Miss Mary Murray, refreshment tables.

LONDON—Havelock Wilson, president of the Seamen's Union, has issued a letter to the Ship Owners' Association making a final appeal for their co-operation in establishing a conciliation board so as to avoid an international strike. Owing to the strike of coal porters at Southampton, the American line steamship St. Paul, which was to steam for New York, will be delayed, and the White Star Olympic is having difficulty in obtaining a crew. A whole fleet of ships chartered by the government and others for the coal review are lying off the port unable to fill their coal bunkers.

Paper Crowns at Rehearsal.

LONDON—The coronation ceremony was rehearsed in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster, many of the principal participants being cached in the roles which they will have to fill on June 22. The Archbishop of Canterbury at appropriate moments performed the actions of crowning and anointing with oil those representing King George and Queen Mary. The paper crowns were circular pieces of pasteboard.

MRS. HOBBS IN TEARS AT PIER

With tears trembling under her long lashes, Mrs. Henry Homer Hobbs, formerly Miss Helen Whittier Andrus of Yonkers, who eloped from her father's palatial home with "Helne" Hobbs of Springfield, the big football star of Andover, Dartmouth and Yale, denied on the dock of the White Star liner Romanic today that she ever said "such cruel things" of her father as were quoted of her in the morning papers.

"Of course I love my papa dearly—it hurts me to be estranged from him. I hope papa will forgive me. I never said I wouldn't make advances to him—I'd go on my knees to him."

Such were some of the disjointed phrases that fell from the bride's lips. But at the close she put in the inevitable feminine reservation. She said:

"But I couldn't give up my husband."

Mrs. Hobbs made a pathetic figure as she asked an AMERICAN reporter to deny for her the unfilial statements which she said she never made and never meant to make.

Sails Away in Tears.

She managed to keep back the tears till the steamer was towed away from the dock. Then the sight of people on the dock waving to friends on ship and the latter waving back brought on her feelings. There was none to wave to the bridal couple.

The reporter, standing on the dock, saw Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs standing apart from the rest. Mrs. Hobbs's lips trembled. Finally she dabbed at her eyes with her handkerchief. She was crying. Hobbs, who was hovering over her, slipped his arm around her waist and led her to the other rail.

Hobbs himself had some vigorous denials to make. He said he never called Congressman Andrus of Yonkers his bride's father, "the old man," nor did he boast about his bankroll.

The eloping couple came from the Hotel Touraine to the White Star dock in good season to start on their honeymoon trip abroad. Hobbs wore blue serge and a straw hat. He looked the typical collegian.

Mrs. Hobbs was in blue and white. She wore a finely fitting tailored suit of navy blue. Her hat of straw to match the suit was trimmed with white. She wore white veil and white gloves. She tends to brunette in complexion, is of average feminine height and of well-rounded figure.

Can't Give Up Husband.

Hobbs was as attentive as a new husband of a pretty bride could be. The couple was anxious to be set straight, so far as previous interviews went. Mrs. Hobbs said right away:

"I will to have corrected some statements which have been quoted as coming from me. I never said them. I love my papa. Of course I do. I love him dearly. It hurts me to be estranged from him. But what could I do? I intended to marry Henry. We wanted to be married some time ago. I hope papa will forgive me, and I never said such a cruel thing as that. I'd never make any advances to him. Why, I'd go on my knees to him—but I won't give up my husband."

Mrs. Hobbs flashed a loving smile toward her husband as she concluded her statement. Hobbs responded with such an appreciative smile in return that all the little Grooms who had been clustering about were driven back temporarily by a valiant charge of the Jets. But the Glooms were not to be routed. Hobbs was safe because he had been misquoted, too. He burst out with:

"Say, I wish you'd deny for me that I ever spoke of Mr. Andrus as 'the old man' or that I ever boasted about having a big bank roll. Of course, I see no reason why I should humble myself to Mr. Andrus. But I'd go a good ways to make my wife happy and would forget a good deal for her."

No Farewell for Pair.

Just then the "all ashore" gong rang. People down to see friends off started farewell handshaking and kissing. There was none to bid fond farewell to the bridal pair. A young man friend of Hobbs did come to the boat with them, but he left as soon as they were aboard.

"Isn't it too bad we haven't anyone here to say good-bye to us?" said the bride wistfully.

Mushroom Corns

Most Painful of All Foot Ailments How to Cure Them.

The Mushroom corn is so called from its pitted cone top, resembling a tiny mushroom. It burrows deep into the toe and gets more inflamed than other corns. For the quick relief and cure of these and all corns and callouses the following is the most effective remedy known to science. Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of hot water. Soak the feet in this for full fifteen minutes, gently massaging the sore parts. (Less time will not give desired results.) All soreness instantly disappears and the corn or callous can easily be peeled off. It may be necessary to repeat this for a number of nights for a complete cure, but if adhered to, it will surely succeed. A little olive oil rubbed on the part is very beneficial. This Calocide is a very remarkable preparation for all foot ailments and is no longer confined to doctors' use, as it has it in stock or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. A twenty-five cent package is usually sufficient to put the worst feet in fine condition. Bad smelling feet and tender feet need only a few treatments, likewise with inflamed bunions. This item will be welcomed by persons who have tried ineffectual powders and tablets.

Girls in Stokes Case Tell New Story of the Shooting

Most striking pictures yet published of young women whose defence will be paid for by a wealthy New Yorker. Lillian Graham at left and Ethel Conrad at right.

RICH NEW YORKER TO DEFRAY EXPENSE OF FACING CLUBMAN'S PROSECUTION.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Unlimited funds were placed at the disposal of Herman Phillips, counsel for Miss Lillian Graham and Miss Ethel Conrad, charged with attempting the murder of W. E. D. Stokes, multi-millionaire owner of the Hotel Ansonia.

Attorney Phillips would not reveal the name of the man who had come to the aid of the two girls, but said that the "angel" was a very rich man. In addition to word from the "angel," Lawyer Phillips received a very substantial guarantee.

Miss Lillian Graham to-day told another story of the case. The young woman declares that Stokes wrecked her life and cast her aside. She further charges that after he had discarded her he told stories about her. The much-talked-about letters, she said, were not worth five cents to Stokes or anybody else, wherefore the charge that she demanded $25,000 blackmail was absurd.

As the sought of Stokes, she said, was a written retraction of his slanderous remarks, but he not only refused to make this retraction, but rushed upon her in a savage fury and sought to choke her.

Miss Graham's Story.

This is Miss Graham's story in detail:

"I will hide nothing. I want everybody to know that my life was wrecked by W. E. D. Stokes. He is a wicked man, and while I never wanted to kill him, the world would be much better off without him.

"I wanted him to take back the vile stories he had told about me and my mother, and I went to him at the Ansonia to have him do it. He refused and put me out of his office.

"I was in need of money. He gave me a pittance and I sent Ethel to him to plead with him and he told her falsehoods about me. I determined that he should retract those stories and when he came down to fight was made in a Baby Wright made on Grahame-White's plans, and a revolving Gnome engine of fifty horsepower was used.

Martin left the Met field at 6:06 and landed again at 6:24. The distance traversed was about sixteen miles. He flew over Watertown and Mount Auburn to Cambridge. Over Mount Auburn his engine started to skip, and he elected for a while to get it in tune, and then decided to give up flying to the Stadium in time later. He swung about in a big circle and returned to Waltham.

Martin is vice-president of the Harvard Aeronautical Society, and was the pilot of the "Ground Hog" that attracted attention at the Squantum meet last year, by its failure to fly.

MARTIN FLIES OVER STADIUM

James V. Martin of Seattle, Wash., who with his English wife arrived in this country recently, flew from the Mets aviation field in Waltham to the Stadium in Cambridge and returned without a stop. GALVIN WRITES NEWS OF ERIN

C. O'Connell Galvin, the Sunday AMERICAN'S special commissioner to Ireland to investigate the conditions there and write for the great fight for Home Rule that is being waged, is one of the speakers at the annual convention of the United Irish League of Great Britain, held at Cork, last week, as was noted by the Cork Examiner.

Mr. Galvin's speech was received with much applause and the large audience cheered for the AMERICAN when he was introduced. Mr. Galvin was accompanied to the convention by T. P. O'Connor and Joseph Devlin, members of Parliament, both of whom are his friends.

An unusually interesting instalment of letters from Mr. Galvin, written from Ireland, will be found in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

BABIES BARRED NOW IN BABY TENEMENT

BROCKTON, June 10.—Brockton's famous "baby flats," six tenements under one roof, built exclusively for families with babies, will hereafter be rented to childless tenants, says John Hill Bartlett, whose syndicate to build tenements for families with a babies resulted in the famous Theodore Roosevelt sending him a personal letter of commendation. Yesterday Mr. Bartlett announced that he saw no reason why families should be barred from tenements because they had children. A year ago Mr. Bartlett married a waitress. To-day he stated that he had renounced his former opinion of babies. Mr. Bartlett does not express himself as opposed to babies, but Mrs. Bartlett frankly admits she prefers families without them.

A souvenir of the Hotel Men's harbor trip that was much appreciated was a booklet showing views of historic Boston, distributed by Coats & Burgess.

BOY INDICTED AS HIGHWAYMAN

The Suffolk grand jury reported to Judge Stevens in the Suffolk Superior Court sixty-five indictments and twenty-five ignore bills. Included among these is the indictment of James Quinn, fourteen, who is so small that he could barely see over the dock and plead not guilty to the charge of robbery. He is accused of holding up a full grown man and robbing him of a watch and chain and $12 in money. It is one of the most unusual cases ever seen in the Superior Court.

Arthur L. Boardman, who shot and killed Arthur A. Munroe on Joiner's Island, May 22 last, in his lobster packing house store in a dispute over a box of cigarettes, was indicted for second degree murder in two counts. In the lower court Boardman was held only upon the charge of manslaughter. He was not arraigned to-day, as his counsel, Jesse Morton, who was junior counsel in the case of Hattie Lee Blanc, was not present.

Joseph Anderson was indicted for assault upon his wife Martha on April 22 with intent to murder, and pleaded not guilty. He was held for trial without bail.

George E. Schofield, whom Watts and Ward agents had arrested while they were pursuing the search for Gertrude Quimby, pleaded not guilty to a serious charge and was held for trial in default of bail. Indicted on the white slavery charges were Antonio Tonnelli, Andrew Iannitton and Archelo Frangos.

S. Graham Benson, a twenty-three-year-old Dorchester youth was indicted on four counts of forgery and four counts of uttering. He is charged with forging and uttering checks on the Commonwealth Trust Company Company to the extent of $200 on May 5, 8 and 11.

FAMOUS AGITATOR, CARRIE NATION DEAD

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., June 10.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, the temperance champion of hatchet fame is dead in an asylum here from paresis. She had been suffering from nervous disorders for many months and had been an inmate of the sanitarium since January 22.

The career of Carrie Nation as a saloon smasher ended four years ago. She made an attempt to capitalize the notoriety she achieved more than a decade ago, when she began using her hatchet on Kansas barrooms, and took to the stage. She "starred" in "Two Nights in a Barroom," and wrote a play of her own, called "Hatchetation." Neither venture was a success.

At the last, Mrs. Nation was practically friendless. Her husband divorced her at the very outset of her career. Many of the friends and followers who lauded her after her first attack on Kansas saloons dropped away from her as leaves before a November wind when she became possessed of the fanatical frenzy which made her name a household word throughout the United States.

MEXICO QUAKE HORROR GROWS

MEXICO CITY, June 10.—Reports coming in from the territory devastated by the eruptions of Mount Colima and Mount Sangkar indicate that the number of deaths resulting from volcanic eruptions and earthquake shocks is more than 5,000. The full force of the horror is just beginning to be realized as the reports come in from the stricken districts outside of Mexico City.

News was received today that Mt. Ruiz, in the province of Yuratan, had erupted, pouring forth great streams of molten lava. Many Indian villages were swept from the earth and all of their inhabitants killed. Those who tried to escape perished in a forest fire that caught from the volcano and burned unchecked over thousands of acres.

An estimate of the dead as the result of the earthquake of Wednesday and the attendant eruptions of the volcanoes is placed at 5,000, but as further facts reach this city it is believed that the death list will amount to a greater figure.

For a distance of fifty miles or more the earth is strewn with the wreckage and dead bodies resulting from the eruption of Mount Colima.

It became known to-day that the activity of Mount Bacalar was almost as fatal as that of Mount Colima.

The eruption and earthquake were attended by a gigantic tidal wave on the shores of Hee Bay, Campeche, which was terribly destructive of life and property.

Sailors Held on Murder Charge

BARGE CAPTAIN IS MURDERED AT SEA

tragedies of all sorts, pronounced it a murder as soon as he saw the man. There was no way in which he could have dealt himself such terrible wounds.

Three Sailors Questioned.

Detectives were put on the case as soon as the nature of the case was learned and the history of the three prisoners was looked up. The men were questioned separately. Their stories, it was said, did not agree, but they all insisted on their innocence.

News of the crime was brought to this city early to-day by Captain F. H. Camp of the tug Monomoy. The Monomoy was towing the Glendower, together with the Reed and the Rotherford, two other barges, to this city, about 7:30 o'clock last night, when the captain received a signal from the Glendower to draw alongside. The barges were then about six miles east of Minot Light. Captain Camp answered the signal and was told by the crew of the Glendower that Captain Wynnan was dead in his bunk. At that time it was not known that murder had been committed, and the tug with the three barges in tow proceeded into Boston Harbor.

Cook Meets Investigators.

Captain Camp reported the finding of the body to the harbor police, and Sergeant George McCausland and Patrolmen William Rymes, Herbert Cross and John Freeman, together with Medical Examiner George Magrath and a party of newspaper men, started down the harbor in the police launch Alert.

The police were met by Dr. Graff, the cook, who was standing up and down the after deck. The cook was the only one on deck at the time. The other members of the crew were asleep in their bunks in the crew's quarters over the captain's cabin. Headed by Dr. McGrath and Sergeant McCausland, the party entered the captain's cabin. Captain Wynnan's dead body lay face downward at full length on the floor. His face and head were a mass of cuts and bruises and his hair and clothing matted with blood. The walls and ceiling of the bunk were spattered, although the cabin bore no traces of a struggle.

Murder, Says Dr. Magrath.

The captain was fully dressed and his body was wound up in a blanket, from the position in which the body was found it appeared as if the captain was beaten to death as he lay asleep and that the first blow was probably sufficient to cause death. After a superficial examination the medical examiner pronounced the case a murder.

As soon as Dr. Magrath declared the case a murder, Sergeant McCausland ordered the policemen to search the ship. Prisoners Nelson and Prishich were ordered to get their clothing and to dress. They descended the ladder to the deck and the police proceeded to question them regarding the finding of the body. The police had already obtained a statement from De Graff, and when it was seen that the statements of Prishich and Nelson were conflicting with that of the cook the three men were separated and made to tell their stories individually.

The last I saw of the Captain," said De Graff, "was about a quarter to 12 yesterday morning, just after dinner, when he went into his bunk to get a little sleep. I washed up the dishes in the galley and then turned into my own bunk and went to sleep. The other two were aloft, one at the wheel and the other asleep in his bunk.

No Answer to Supper Bell.

"I got up again about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and started to get the supper. I thought it strange that I did not see the captain, but as he was a very quiet man and often remained by himself for some time at a stretch, I thought no more about him. About a quarter to 5 I pulled the bell cord ringing him to supper, but did not get any answer, and I thought he was asleep. He had been complaining lately about pains in his stomach, and I imagined that and I thought that perhaps he was not feeling well and would rather sleep. We are not permitted to enter the captain's cabin, so I did not disturb him.

"The donkey-man (Prishich) came down from the wheel at 5 o'clock and asked what the matter was with the captain, he had not seen him about the deck since dinner time. I told him I didn't know and he said we had better wake him up, there must be something wrong. I said 'Perhaps he is asleep and we had better not disturb him.' I take the wheel at 6 o'clock and stay there until 8. When 6 o'clock came I relieved Nelson, who went below. About twenty minutes later the donkey-man reported that we had better awake he captain as we were getting near the harbor and it was up to him to be at the wheel when we entered port, and he didn't know how."

Waited Before Signalling.

"I called to Nelson and he took the wheel and I went to the deck and entered the captain's cabin. The door was open and I told the donkey-man to follow me. I stepped into the cabin. The captain was lying on the bunk wrapped up in a blanket. I saw blood scattered on the floor and I was surprised. I walked over to the bunk and touched the captain on the shoulder. The body was taxed and I could see he was dead.

"I turned and told the donkey-man who came as far as the door and looked, but would not come any further. The both of us then went out on the deck and the donkey-man wanted to signal to the tug to come alongside, but there was a heavy sea rolling and I thought it would be too dangerous. I told him to wait until we got into the harbor and we could tell somebody then. That is all I know about it. There was no trouble on board of my sort. The captain was a good man and never complained. The food was good, very good and lots of it, and there was no kick coming from either the donkey-man nor myself on that score. The whole thing is a mystery to me."

The Glendower, the float and the Rotherford are all owned by the Reading Railroad Company and used for the transfer of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal Company. The three barges, with the Glendower the second one of the string, left Port Richmond Philadelphia late Saturday afternoon and cleared the Delaware River early Tuesday morning. Fine weather was encountered off the Massachusetts coast and the tug and barges were somewhat delayed. The Rutherford was bound for Portland, Me., the Reed for Hoboken, and the Glendower for the Boston Wharf carrying a cargo of 850 tons of coal.

No Forewarning of Trouble.

Nothing unusual happened on the way up from Philadelphia until Captain Camp of the tow boat received the distress signal from the Glendower. Captain Camp declared he did not know whether the Captain had been murdered or had committed suicide when he answered the finding of the body to the police.

De Graff, the cook, is a hunchback. His face is weazened and his hands and his arms long and powerful. His hands are large and gnarled from hard work. He claims Gloucester as his home, but is a native of Rotterdam. While being questioned on board the large early to-day, De Graff was told all his rights by Sergeant McCausland.

"Remember," the sergeant said, "whatever you say will be used against you. You are held on the charge of murder, and it is your duty to answer questions unless you want to."

De Graff's hunchback laughed, and said, "I will be careful. I am sorry for the captain, but I am not afraid."

A search was made of the barge in an effort to find the weapon with which the crime was committed but nothing was found. Keep track of the crew's quarters and the cook's galley was gone over carefully but no trace of any instrument bearing bloodstains was found. The quarters of De Graff, Nelson Prishich were also searched without success, and the only clew found by the police which would assist them in establishing the motive of the murderer is the pair of blood-stained trousers which are said to have been found in the cook's galley.

As soon as the three members of the crew were told of their arrest they collected their belongings into canvas bags such as are used by seamen and these were lowered aboard the police launch while the police questioned Nelson and Prishich regarding what had happened on board the Glendower during the past two days.

"I don't know anything about the murder," said Prishich. "I know very little about the captain. He kept very much to himself. I shipped in this Philadelphia. Everything was all right on board and there was no trouble to speak of until yesterday when we discovered the dead body of the captain in his cabin."

"The captain turned in just after dinner and I thought he was asleep. I returned to myself for a little while and at 2 o'clock I took the wheel from Nelson and remained there until 5 o'clock. There was no sign of the captain and I thought it strange as we were nearing port, and I knew he would have to take the wheel going into the harbor and I remarked about it. When Nelson came to relieve me at 5 o'clock I went below and asked the cook where the captain was. He's asleep, he said. Don't disturb him."

Insists on Calling Captain.

"I wanted to wake him but the cook said 'No, let him alone.' So I stopped. When the captain did not come to supper I suspected something was wrong as he is ordinarily was on deck at supper. So about 6 o'clock I called to the cook who had gone to the wheel that we had better wake up the captain as we were getting into the harbor. He said something that I could not hear and then said 'All right, I'll be down.' He turned the wheel over to Nelson who had just finished his supper and descended the ladder to the deck.

"The cook then said to me, 'Come on' and went to the door of the captain's cabin and walked in. I followed him, and he walked over to the captain's bunk. The captain was wrapped up in a blanket and I saw a lot of blood. The cook pulled the blanket back, and I saw that the captain was dead. I got scared and ran out on the deck. I wanted to pull the whole boat and send for the tug, but the cook would not let me. He said 'Wait until we get into the harbor. We can tell somebody then.' He thought it was too rough to send the tug ground in the sea would be dangerous. I said, 'Danger or no danger, the captain ought to be notified' and I started for the whistle in the bow of the boat to signal the tug.

"The cook said, 'Well, all right,' and then he rushed me and made for the whistle. He pulled it twice. When he got through I went to the whistle and pulled two short and two long blasts, the distress signal and the tug came about and drew up alongside and we told the captain of the tug that Captain Wynnan was dead.

"I don't know any more about it. It is certain he was killed he was murdered sometime between noon and 5 or 5:30 p. m. I wasn't down on deck at all after dinner. When I got out of my bunk at 2 o'clock I went right up to the wheel and remained there until 5 o'clock. The cook relieved me at 5 o'clock and I went to supper and then went below to get my clothes ready. Nelson turned into his bunk behind the wheelhouse and went to sleep, and I did not see him again until 6 o'clock.

"As far as I know the cook and the captain were the only ones on deck between noon and 5 o'clock. I was in the crew's quarters and the cook's room would either have to pass through a door leading from there into the wheelhouse or else climb through a side window which is very small. If he wanted to reach the deck by means of the ladders he would have to pass me at the wheel anyway and I would have seen him."

OLEA BULL TOO ILL TO APPEAR

ALFRED, Me., June 10.—Mrs. Olea Bull Vaughan will not testify at the hearing on the bill of her mother, Mrs. Ole Bull. This statement was made positively to-day by Miss Amelia Shapleigh, at the home of whose mother in West Lebanon the daughter of the famous Norwegian violinist is very seriously ill.

"Mrs. Vaughan is so ill that she is not permitted to see anyone except the family," said Miss Shapleigh, who has been her lifelong companion. "She cannot read the newspapers because the account of the will contest excite her to much, but I attend the sessions of the court and tell her in substance all that happens.

"She has a very bad cough and a high temperature and is not even able to Live in the tent we got for her. But she has a great room with many windows and a southern exposure and practically lives in the open. We hope that with the coming of the warmer weather her condition may improve.

"Mrs. Vaughan has every confidence in her lawyers, Mr. Whipple and Mr. Barrett, and I am sure that she will get a large share of the estate of $583,944, that her mother left. At first she worried considerably over the affair and her temperature mounted in consequence, but she has quieted down now and is content to leave everything to her counsel."

Edmund M. Parker, co-executor and trustee with Joseph G. Thorp under Mrs. Bull's will, and who shares law offices with Mr. Thorp at No. 131 State street, Boston, will be the next witness called in the attorneys for the contestant when the will hearing is resumed at 2 p. m. Monday. The New York County Probate Court Mr. Thorp, brother of the testatrix, spent yesterday and the two days on the witness stand, and Mr. Parker's examination is expected to be as intimated and lengthy.

BRIDGE CROSSING CALLED DANGEROUS

That the Cambridge end of the Harvard bridge over the Charles River, where Massachusetts avenue crosses the Charles river esplanade at right angles, is a great danger point because of traffic conditions and insufficient regulation of the traffic was one of the assertions that Professor James B. Fray, of Harvard University, made at the third of the Boston 1915 city planning talks. After discussing the value of a carefully devised street plan as a preventative of traffic congestion, he stated that even the best street plan might require a certain amount of traffic regulation, and pointed to Massachusetts avenue as it enters Cambridge as an example.

WEATHER HALTS AIR TRIP FOR $100,000

ROME, June 10.—After having made all arrangements to start for Turin in the $100,000 air contest arranged by the Paris Journal of Paris, Aviator Pegy, the German entrant, was compelled to postpone his departure to-day on account of the weather. The final leg of the race from Rome lies over a route where landings are impossible. The aviators in competing this part of the course must remain aloft for three hours, and an accident means almost certain death. The distance from here to Turin is about 300 miles.

OFF FOR ROME IN 25-FOOTER

PROVIDENCE, June 10.—The twenty-five-foot yawl, Sea Bird, sloops at 2 o'clock on her 4,000-mile sea voyage from Providence to Rome. There appears to be a world-wide interest in the trip, for messages extending best wishes came to the intrepid yachtsmen all day long to-day, some by cable.

Fred R. Thurber, former owner of the Little Haste, will act as chief navigator of the Sea Bird. She starts from the Rhode Island Yacht Club. Mr. Thurber has had a great deal of offshore sailing, going three times to Bermuda, and is an expert navigator.

The Sea Bird was sailed over to Edgewood Yacht Club last evening. Hundreds of friends and relatives of the daring mariners, and members of the club, will be on hand to see them off and wish them good luck and a quick voyage.

$2,000 Cash Prize.

All sorts of alleged jokes have been played on the three navigators, presents in mourning envelopes and other missives have been sent to them. Hundreds of their friends have tearfully and soulfully bid them a last farewell.

Much awaits the amateur mariners on the other side. A $1,000 cup offered by King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, and a $2,000 cash prize given by the automobile club of Rome, are furnishing the incentive for the trip, which will be undertaken by Thomas Fleming Day, Theodore H. Goodwin and Fred R. Thurber.

The Sea Bird and her crew will be one of the interesting features in the yachting carnival in connection with the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Italian unification. It is altogether probable that she will be escorted across the Mediterranean by an Italian cruiser, and that the king himself will go on board.

Designed By the Owner.

The Sea Bird, which was designed by her owner, Thomas Fleming Day, and Charles Mower, is twenty-five feet two inches over all, eight feet four inches beam, three feet eight inches draft, and is equipped with a three horse-power kerosene engine. In the working sails the Sea Bird has a spread of forty square feet, but she is also equipped with a square sail having 120 square feet of canvas.

The yawl was the first to finish in the New York-Newport ocean race for the Lipton cup. Leaving Providence, the Sea Bird will first make the Azores, distance 2,200 miles; then Gibraltar, 900 miles, and from there she will steer by way of the Straits of Bonifacio it is another 900 miles, a total distance of 4,000 miles.

MISS PENDLETON WELLESLEY HEAD

Announcement that Miss Ellen Fitz Pendleton, Dean of Wellesley College, is elected President of that institution by the Board of Trustees was made to the college faculty and students at the regular chapel service by Dr. Samuel B. Capen, president of the board. The faculty and college girls organized for fully five minutes.

Miss Pendleton, looking particularly handsome and stately in a simple white dress and black Geneva gown, smiled her pleasure at this warm greeting. But she made no speech.

The chapel scene was picturesque. Dr. Capen and Miss Pendleton were on the platform. Behind them hanged the girl choir in its black gowns.

In the front of the main auditorium were the Seniors in caps and gowns. Behind them were the Juniors in white. Behind the Juniors were the members of the faculty in their gowns, with the scarlet hoods of their respective degrees. The Freshman and Sophomore transepts were jammed with girls. There were over 1,500 people in the chapel.

Miss Pendleton, as dean, opened the services as usual. After the prayer Dr. Capen said:

Dr. Capen's Little Joke.

"It has been a very grave problem as to whether a college with the business and academic interests of Wellesley ought not to have a man president. But the trustees discussed it thoroughly and came to the unanimous conclusion some weeks ago that Wellesley should be true to its traditions and to the plan of its founder and continue to have a woman president instead of a man.

"That disposed of that half of the human race of which Professor McDougall and myself are the only representatives here this morning.

"In selecting a woman president we have had in mind three things.

"First—She must be familiar with educational problems.

"Second—She must have large gifts of administration; that is, she must be a person of courage, dignity and vitality, poise, originality, tact and un-selfishness.

"Third—Finally, in order to be true to the purpose of the founder and to the motto of the college, she must be a woman of high christian purpose.

"With these thoughts in mind we looked through the list of candidates available and, without opposition, finally and enthusiastically the Board of Trustees selected her whom you have called Ellen, Ellen Fitz Pendleton, to be your President.

Applause and Hymn.

Dr. Capen turned and shook hands with President Pendleton. Students and faculty sprang to their feet and clapped hands loudly and long. From somewhere in the faculty came a woman's voice: "Let us sing 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow.'" So all joined in the Doxology. The chapel service was concluded without other ceremony.

Miss Pendleton, who was a member of the class of 1886, is the first Wellesley graduate to be chosen president of the college.

Her experience as dean since 1901 and as acting president since the resignation of Caroline Hazard a year ago, and during the long absences of the president previous to that make Miss Pendleton the logical selection for promotion to the presidency.

By the selection of Miss Pendleton the governing board of the college adheres to the principle, so stoutly defended by the alumnae, that there should be a woman president. Her own classmates, who celebrate this year the twenty-fifth anniversary of their graduation, are expected to bring to the campus a particularly warm greeting for her.

Served College Long.

Miss Pendleton was born in Westerly, R. I., August 7, 1864. She received her A. B. degree in 1886, and two years later was made an instructor in the department of mathematics. Since that time, she has served continuously as a member of the faculty. She studied 1893 and 1894 at Newnham College, Cambridge, England. At Wellesley she received the degree of A. M. in 1891.

In 1897 she was made treasurer of the college. Four years later she became dean, having a month previously been appointed head of College Hall. In additiou to dean, she had been associate professor of mathematics.

ARRAIGNED IN $25,000 THEFT

WOONSOCKET, R. I., June 10.—Hermenegilde Bessette, teller of the People's National Bank of this city, who was arrested May 15 on the charge of embezzlement, was arraigned to-day before Judge Charles H. McIlvee. Bessette waived examination and was held in $10,000 bonds for the action of the September Grand Jury. He appeared unconcerned as he heard his former associate testify against him. George M. Weld, the president of the bank, Reuben G. Rathbun, cashier, and John R. Boyden, a clerk were called as witnesses.

Bessette was represented by former Mayor George W. Greene and Ex-U. S. Gutmann. Bail was furnished at once and Bessette went to his home in Harrisville. Bessette was employed in the institution for seventeen years, ten of which he was cashier. When the books were examined by Bank Commissioner William P. Goodell, the latter found a shortage. According to the commissioner, Bessette admitted his responsibility for a shortage of $25,000.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Watermelons have been coming to Boston on the Southern line of coastwise ships for several days and they find a ready market. Good melons sell for about seventy-five cents each, with a good prospect that they will sell much cheaper in a short time.

Rocky Ford canteloupes from the far Southwest have been selling in Boston for the past few days at from one and fifty to five cents each, but the dealers say that there are large shipments on the way here, some of which are expected to-day, which will bring the price down to a lower.

The green corn which has been coming into the market for the past few days has been much better in point of ears under the husks. However, the dealers only charge fifty cents a dozen for the corn and throw in the worms gratis.

California cherries are here in quantities. They sell for fifty cents a pound at present, but the price will fall immediately.

Huckleberries are coming up from Norfolk and other Southern points. They sell for twenty cents a box.

New York strawberries, much superior in quality to the Southern that have been coming in, are now being offered for twenty cents a box.

For the first time in two years it is possible to buy a large mackerel in Boston for a quarter.

HOUSE BEGINS SUGAR INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Investigation of the New York customs house sugar frauds, and the compromise settlement made by Attorney General Wickersham with the American Sugar Refining Company, began today before the special House committee investigating the methods of the Department of Justice. Representative Beall of Texas is chairman of the committee.

District Attorney Wise of New York told the committee that it had been impossible to get action on the men "higher up" because of the statute of limitations after Arbuckle and Jamieson of the Arbuckle Refining Company," said the witness, "on unfavorable the evidence was such that we did not seem able to get them."

"Has anybody in the American Sugar Refining Company higher up than Havemeyer been prosecuted" asked Chairman Beall.

"The man above Hell—he is beyond prosecution," replied Mr. Wise. "He was Henry Havemeyer, who died a few months after the frauds were discovered in 1907."

"How about the other officers of the American Sugar Refining Company?" asked Chairman Beall.

"Havemeyer was the company. The others were all members of Havemeyer's hands," responded Mr. Wise.

Chairman Beall then asked Mr. Wise why the government had not insisted on penalties instead of making a compromise settlement with both the American and Arbuckle companies?

"I had nothing to do with the settlement," said Mr. Wise. District Attorney Stimson handled that during his regime. As for me, I believe in the pound of flesh and blood for all those who violate the customs laws, and I attempt to enforce penalties, forfeit the goods and collect the duties as provided by law."

GOV. POTHIER FOOLED BY BOGUS NOBLEMAN

Governor Pothier, former Lieutenant-Governor Adelard Archambeault, of Rhode Island, and Lorenzo de Nevers, a Central Falls photographer, were stung by the bogus French duke who has just worked Boston, who went under names of De Clanney and De Nevers among others.

Wednesday the man came to Providence and went through the State House as the guest of Governor Pothier. Wednesday is the Governor's day in town for business and about 11 o'clock the duke called upon him. The guide was delegated to show him about the building and while this was going on a reporter called upon the Governor. "I'll give you a little item," said the Governor to the reporter, "there is a fine young Frenchman here from Washington. He says he is the military attache at the French embassy. The guide is now showing him about the building. Here he comes now."

WELLS TRAINING AT STRATFORD

Matt Wells, the English lightweight champion, who boxes Pal Moore next Tuesday evening, has selected Stratford, Ct., as the place where he will prepare for his contest. Captain Bond, who runs the training quarters, and Wells are old friends, and as Wells has been lucky in all the matches he trained for at that place, he does not want to change.

Wells is very careful about his drinking water, as sometimes a change of water will seriously interfere with a boxer's physical condition, and as Moore is a dangerous opponent he wants to be at his best when he steps into the ring Tuesday night. Wells will come to the club house Monday and rest up the following day.

His backer, Dave Levy, and George McDonald, who look after Wells' interests, will stay in Boston and run down to Stratford every day. Murphy, well known to many of the old-timers in Boston, and he was kept busy renewing old acquaintances. He is the man who trained John L. Sullivan for his contest with Charley Mitchell.

Moore is doing his work at Allenhurst, N. J., and while he realizes the contract he is undertaking, he is full of confidence that he will be returned the winner. In his last bout at this club with Jack Redmond he bested like a world's champion, and it is a certainty he will be as good, if not better, next Tuesday night when he faces England's best lightweight.

SCHOOLS TO SETTLE THE CHAMPIONSHIP

Cambridge Latin, Brookline High, Roxbury Latin and Boston Latin will now left to battle it out next Tuesday afternoon for the schoolboy regatta championship. The crews to qualify for the semi-final championships were Noble and Greenough and Brookline, which took places in the first heats, together with Roxbury Latin and Rindge, winners in the second heat.

Weather conditions were ideal yesterday when the preliminaries were rowed. There was not very much wind blowing, and the surface of the river was nearly as smooth as glass. The regatta was run off in fine style, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators, who gathered on the Cottage Farm side of the river wall and on the Harvard and Cottage Farm bridges. The crews raced over the course which starts at Hereford street and ends opposite the coal wharf just below the Cottage Farm bridge.

You've got to hand it to the Rustlers for this.

They have the best battery in the National League. What I don't know how he does it, is tomorrow's BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

AD WOLGAST WANTS TO BE A BALL PLAYER

Before he started boxing Ad Wolgast, the lightweight champion, had great ideas of becoming a professional ball player. Wolgast is a baseball fan of the first water, and from what is understood can play a pretty fast game himself. Ad is a natural southpaw, which accounts in a measure for his work with the Terriers. Wolgast at one time thought that he would make a good left-handed pitcher. The champion has not worked out, but he did not follow up the baseball game, as he thinks he can make more of a profession than several southpaw pitchers playing to-day.

VOTE ON EARLIER GAMES

CHICAGO, June 10.—President Murphy of the Chicago Nationals has found the scheme of starting week day games at 3 o'clock so pleasing to his patrons that he is contemplating advancing the starting time another half hour to 2:30 o'clock, but will consult the patrons before deciding to do so. If he has laid ballot boxes around and as soon as the ballots can be furnished ask the "fans" to vote on the proposition.

YALE OARSMEN SHAPING WELL

GALES FERRY, Ct., June 10.—Slightly reducing the daily rowing dose, Coach John Kennedy sent the varsity and freshman crews over only six miles of the route this morning. The boats did not go at top speed, no time work, but had three pretty quarter-mile brushes, in which the regulars shot ahead in every case and in a mile race had the advantage of two lengths when the spurt ceased.

Both eights had been driven for a thirty-seven stroke for the mile stretch and held it in the clearest cut form since the annual race here. The freshman eight is one of the most formidable class organizations that ever came here and it holds the varsity stubbornly in the lurches. The varsity has shown dash and good blade work since its reorganization, but it has yet to face a grueling four-mile row at a high stroke.

Coach Kennedy ordered the first change in any crew last night, Scully and Rodgers were transposed, Scully going to No. 3 and Rodgers to No. 5. Kennedy said that there was nothing permanent about the arrangement. It seemed to work well. Captain Frost was, however, out of form this time. He is not in strong form, but declines to take a rest.

It was announced that the referee's boat at the regatta this year will be August Belmont's yacht. Mr. Belmont has placed the yacht at the disposal of the two navies and his offer has been accepted with thanks.

CARR BEATEN BY CALLAGHAN

The bout between Eddie Carr of South Boston and Paddy Callaghan of Brooklyn, limited to eight rounds, ended in the seventh, at the Armory A. A. last night, when the referee stopped the contest because Carr was in no shape to continue. The referee declared Callaghan the winner. Callaghan had the better of the bout from the start and in the fourth, sixth and seventh rounds he put Carr to the floor.

The first one was scored with a right to the jaw, the other two by hard-handed blows on the jaw, one of them being the pivot blow. Carr boxed cleverly but had no steam in his punches. Callaghan showed better form than he did last week.

In the 112-pound class, Harold Edison of North Weymouth, a stranger to the boxing fans, won the prize. He defeated Johnny Connelly of South Boston in the final bout after a hot contest.

For more than four hours a good crowd of fans watched the doffing of the three open classes, 122, 138 and 142 pounds, in all there were eighteen bouts and in most of them the boxing was as rugged as any sport would care to see.

There were a few surprises and the contestants in a couple of the bouts caused considerable fun. The summary:

122-POUND CLASS.

First bout—Joe Trainer, Somerville, beat Frank Barrett, Cambridge, in three rounds.

Second bout—John Connelly, South Boston, beat Tom Jones, London, Eng., in three rounds.

Third bout—Harold Edison, North Weymouth, beat Young Bellmont, in three rounds.

Fourth bout—Young Dalmont, Lawrence, beat George Hines, Hyde Park, in one round, stopped.

Semi-finals.

First bout—J. Connelly beat Joe Trainer in three rounds.

Second bout—Harold Edison stopped Young Delmont in two rounds.

Final bout—Harold Edison beat J. Connelly in three rounds (referee's decision).

138-POUND CLASS.

Trials.

First bout—Chester Walcott, Boston, beat Kid Taylor, Everett, in three rounds.

Second bout—Young Quiner, beat Bobby Taylor, Boston, in two rounds (null).

Third bout—Joe Ferguson, East Boston, beat A. W. Guinness, Cambridge, in three rounds.

Fourth bout—Harry Bradley, Somerville, drew with Young Bradley.

Semi-finals.

First bout—J. Bradley beat Ed Kenny in three rounds.

142-POUND CLASS.

Second bout—Tom O'Brien stopped Billy Burns in three rounds.

Third bout—Dave Powers beat Tom O'Brien in three rounds.

SPECIAL BOUT.

Paddy Callaghan, Brooklyn, stopped Eddie Carr, South Boston, in seven rounds.

PERELLI BEATEN BY CYCLONE BURNS

One of the largest crowds of the season filled Quincy Hall house last night when Cyclone Burns trimmed John Perelli in a fierce wrestling match on the Columbia mat. It was a culmination evidently looked for by the fans for a long time, and they went wild when Burns won the third and deciding fall.

Perelli was disqualified in the first bout after repeated warnings, when he refused to break a straight hold after twenty-one minutes of rough work. The referee broke it and then awarded the fall to Burns. Perelli came back strong, however, and won the second fall in fourteen minutes. The third fall and match went to Burns in nine minutes.

Sam Anderson and Jim Prokos put up an exciting bout for an hour without a fall.

Manager Farren announced another big wrestling card for next Friday night, one of the feature matches being between Anderson and Prokos for a field for the middleweight championship of New England.

FIGHT SUNDAY BALL AT FORT RODMAN

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Senator Lodge has received a petition from Representative Barnett of Boston, secretary of the Lord's Day League of Boston, protesting against Sunday baseball at Fort Rodman near New Bedford. There has been much good-natured comment at the Capitol about the receipt of such petition by the Massachusetts Senators. Friends of baseball for the army have been writing Senator Crane, urging him to use good offices with the War Department. The latest department order allows baseball at Fort Banks, but prohibits the assembling of audiences from the outside.

POINT WINNERS BACK AT ITHACA

ITHACA, N. Y., June 10.—Cornell is already looking for the 1912 championship of the eastern intercollegiate meet to be hung in the gymnasium on the shores of Lake Cayuga.

The Ithacans will have winners of 20 points last in college next year. J. P. Jones, the great middle distance runner; R. S. Berna, the winner of the two-mile; Putnam, who was second in the half-mile, and Kanzler, third in the short mile, will all be undergraduates next Spring. With this nucleus to work on, Trainer Jake Moakley expects to have a still easier time than he did this year turning out a winning team.

Winners of nine points for Michigan will be eligible next year. They are Hanvan, who took second in the mile; Gamble and Haff, who were third and fourth in the quarter; Ross, fourth in the furlong dash, and Hambaugh, third in the mile.

Yale will have Chisholm, winner of both hurdles; R. A. Gardner and S. N. Beyers, second and third for third, respectively in the pole vault; and C. C. Childs, third in the hammer throw.

Pennsylvania can count on Burdick and Farrier, who tied with Dillpingle for first in the high jump; Mercer and La Flamme, second and third in the broad jump; W. W. Hedley, fourth in the half-mile; H. W. Babcock, fourth in the low hurdles, and B. K. Murphy, the hammerthrower.

AMATEUR BOXER IS SUSPENDED BY A. A. U.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Frank Hufnagle, national amateur champion 125-pound boxer, has been indefinitely suspended by the A. A. U. He was summoned to appear before the registration committee of that body to answer the charge of having demanded excessive expense money. Hufnagle failed to appear before the committee, with the result that he was put under the ban of the governing body of the amateurs.

THIEVES AT BOXING MATCH.

CHICAGO, June 10.—Thirty empty pocket books, looted by thieves and found on the floor of the Arena after the close of the Clabby-Brown prize fighting, spelled the last of prize fighting in Hammond, Ind., a suburb which offered Chicago its only place for staging fights. The Hammond board of police commissioners issued an order forbidding any bouts in the future. A half-dozen losses were located and dozens of men lost wallets and stickpins during the fight. Almost the same condition caused the prohibition of fights at Racine, Wis., recently.

HEYBURN VS. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., June 10.—H. B. Heyburn, Philadelphia Cricket, and A. H. Smith, Huntingdon Valley, earned the right to meet in the final round for the individual golf championship of Philadelphia. Heyburn defeated Dr. Shippen 2 up, and Mr. Smith defeated E. Satterwaith, 3 and 4.

RED FANS WANT NEW MANAGER

CINCINNATI, June 10.—Some great debatings and discussions are going on among the dark nuests of the Cincinnati club these days, the topic, of course, being the question of the next manager. Had the Reds come home with a bulky bulge of victories after their recent trip, there would have been no question at all as to the next manager—everybody would have rallied to renew Griffith's contract when it ran out and to push more money upon him. The events of the past few days have tended to swing the tide again in Griffith's favor, but there is still a great deal of chatter.

According to inside information, Ed. Ashenbeck, now managing the Syracuse team, but a native of Cincinnati, has considerable backing for the position. Another faction of the directors, it is asserted, clamor for the repurchase of Miller Huggins and his installation as manager for 1912.

One or two of the stockholders want a player of the Reds chosen as manager—some of player withheld, as the boy himself doesn't know anything about it, is not trying to force himself forward, and would be the last fellow on earth to cause dissension or trouble in the team.

The remaining directors stick to Griffith, firmly assert that he has the goods and is handicapped by evil fortune, and want him to be retained. If the Reds begin to flinch, Griff will doubtless attack. Another run of ill luck and consecutive defeats would make Griff himself so heavily sick that he would resign. He is all wrapped up in the dreams of victory, and could not endure another streak of misfortune.

UMPIRE FLEMING IS DROPPED FROM LEAGUE

Tom Fleming, who umpired the Lynn-Lowell game on Memorial Day over which there was a controversy, has been released from the New England League.

"Fleming gets through," says Secretary Morse, "because of his indecisive position on that Lynn-Lowell game. He is unwilling to take a positive or definite stand, but answers by saying, 'Well, if they say so-and-so, I suppose they are right.' We don't seem to get any satisfaction out of him."

FRANKIE BURNS WINS FROM JOHNNY DALY

NEW YORK, June 10.—Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight, earned the popular decision over Johnny Daly of New York in a 10-round bout at the Twentieth Century A. C. The bout was clever and fast. The infighting was so severe at times that both boys were cautioned by the referee to refrain from holding. Burns delivered the cleanest punches and in the second round staggered Daly with a right hand swing to the jaw. Daly was strong and took all the punishment Burns administered.

RED SOX READY FOR JENNINGS TIGERS

body in town will be out there. Mr. Wood is the hope of the Red race this time. By sunset he will be either hero or a villain.

Young Joe has been trained to the minute, as they say of the pugs. He is in the proverbial pink, down to weight and intends to force the fighting from the start. His left hand is good only for blocking. But he carries a terrific punch in his right.

Some of these Detroit people have hay-makers, too. There is One-Round Cobb, for instance. He has been known frequently to land one of his sleep producers before the fight has fairly started. But Young Joe fears him not. If the Georgia peril can be prevented from getting to that first corner, his footwork will avail him nothing.

Works or Lafitte.

G. Mullin, generally reckoned the best pitcher in the Detroit lot, labored yesterday in Philly. That means he will rest to-day and Monday, too. The Sox will be asked to face Ralph Works, who sometimes doesn't, or Mr. Lafitte, whose name rhymes with eat, not it. This party was with the Rochester club last year and assisted in whaling the Eastern League pennant. He has been a Tiger before, but never as much of a one as he is now.

The game will start at 3 o'clock. Before that hour there will be more than enough folks in the park to start a large manufacturing city.

The dope calls for a fair and warm afternoon. If the dope is wrong, the people in charge of the weather had better beware. They will find themselves defendants in a suit brought by J. J. Taylor for non-support and cruelty.

A great deal depends on how the Sox conduct themselves during the visit of the Tigers to the city. If there is to be an American League pennant in Boston, now is the time to begin working for it.

There are over a dozen defects charged against Detroit in the column reserved for that purpose. This proves that the Tigers are only human after all. If the Sox can add to that total materially, Mr. Jennings and his band won't feel so peppery when it comes time for them to leave town. And if Patsy's team is really serious about copping the championship, it must show the gentlemen from Detroit that the Athletics aren't the only stars in the flag.

Beating Detroit and talking about it are two different things. The Tigers are seldom licked by big margins. They usually put up a terrific fight, whether they win or lose. There is always danger of a game's complexion being changed when people like Cobb, Crawford, Delehanty and Moriarty are in the lineup.

When the Tigers were having that almost unequalled winning St. Gainor, the Fort Wayne recruit, was playing first base, and the rest of the infield was the same as last year. Gainor was hurt a couple of weeks ago and Ness, another recruit, filled in for a while. Now Jim Delehanty is playing first base, or was while the Tigers were in Philadelphia, with Charley O'Leary at second. Charley is one of the greatest utility men in the game and it's doubtful that the team is weakened a particle when he is working in place of some regular.

Jones Laid Off.

Davy Jones is another member of the cripple club. Schalier is subbing for him at times, but recently Delos Drake, the New York State Leaguer, has been the regular left fielder. As long as Cobb and Crawford, Tetlin third baseman, have been Tigers won't be what you could really call crippled.

The Detroit bunch got in this morning. It was a wonderful ride to Philadelphia as a place to visit, they are not in particularly good humor. Playing against the Athletics at Shibe Park always has the effect of "piling" them all together "better" and time to recover from the effect of the Quaker City's hospitality. If Patsy's boys want to take two out of three, or three straight, they must work their heels off to-day and until Tuesday night.

The Tigers usually play better ball when the bugs are after them. Therefore it would be a strategic move on the part of Boston fans to maintain silence or else yell for the visitors. But you can bet your bottom dollar that this sort of strategy will be tossed to the winds. Bostonians will be yelling themselves hoarse for the Sox and trying hard to capture the Detroit goat, which is a most elusive beast. Well ordered and carefully worked up grants are not in the habit of keeping steady company with Tigers.

This week started out to be a nice, comfortable, pleasant one. The White Sox were licked on Monday and then every body expressed deep sorrow when rain came between the home team and a return over the Browns on Tuesday. Folks hated to see anybody get licked, even if Patsy's team is really serious about copping the championship. It must then be gentlemen from Detroit that the Athletics are the only stars in the flag.

Beating Detroit and talking about it are two different things. The Tigers are seldom licked by big margins. They usually put up a terrific fight, whether they win or lose. There is always danger of a

CY YOUNG PITCHES GREAT BALL GAME

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Cy Young pitched his first game of the season against Washington to-day and Cleveland won, 5 to 2. Young allowed but five hits, while Groom was driven from the rubber. Cy got a base hit in four times up, gave one base on balls, and had eight strike-outs.

You've got to hand it to the Rustlers for this.

They have the best batters in the National League. We've been up here for days and how we stuck it, in tomorrow's BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

KID GOODMAN HURT.

Kid Goodman, who has quit the boxing game to become a cigar salesman, got into an argument with some men on Nonantum street. One of them took a punch at Goodman. The Kid suffered more, however, because the man was a good side-stepper. He saw the Kid's return punch coming and dodged it. Goodman's hand went through a plate glass window and his wrist was cut so severely that he had to see a physician to have the injury dressed.

MANY SCHOOL GAMES TO-DAY

But one league game will be played to-day among the high schools but several games of equal importance are on the schedule.

Everett High and Somerville High battle in a Suburban League game at Everett and school followers from Malden, Medford, Everett and Melrose will root for the Everett boys to repeat their performance of last week when they put the Red and Blue on Medford High School.

A win for the Fall River Blue will put their team up close to Medford High for championship honors. Lowell will strive to give Melrose High a fighting chance.

Whitaker and Murray are likely to be the opposing pitchers and they should give a good exhibition.

Malden High and Melrose High have independent games. Malden is playing the Hatherly Club on its home grounds and Melrose High playing Newburyport High at Newburyport.

Waltham High and Newton High are down for a good game at Waltham. Waltham has been playing the ball all season and battled like big beauxers while Newton High has been strong. These two cities are strong rivals and they will put up a hard fight for supremacy.

The Tigers are here for a great battle.

You will want to know all about the opening of the great Red Sox-Detroit series at the Back Bay grounds to-day. You will find the best story in to-

The Rustlers are just as glad to be through with St. Louis as are the Red Sox. The weather has been a little too hot to suit the New Englanders down there in Missouri and they are thankfully accepting relief from the cool breezes of Lake Michigan.

A series of four games with the Chicago Cubs opens to-day. This set should prove a money maker at least for the Bostonians, for it includes a Sunday date, and the Cubs are playing enormous crowds. But Boston fans don't care much about the financial end of it. They want Tenney's team to enjoy an artistic success against the champions of the National League.

Cecil Ferguson may start again this afternoon. George Tyler is another possibility. As Matters, he is not expected going at a great rate on this trip and Tenney certainly wants to use him as often as possible. If he feels thoroughly rested from his trip in St. Louis he will do the pitching. If not he doubtless will work to-morrow.

BASEBALL CHATTER

Ty Cobb doesn't stand very well in Philadelphia, principally because he has been so potent a factor in some of the games the Tigers have won in recent years from the Athletics. To read the reports of Ty's action sent out from the Quaker City one would think he was a burglar, thug and all-around dead incarnate. Ty doesn't like that sort of thing, of course either. The fact of the matter is that his speed and hustling proclivities go against the grain of the inhabitants of a town not built for speed. Ty is a born ball player, and the fans of most cities are willing to admit it and give him his dues.

New York scribes abused the Yankee batsmen for not "swatting out" Ed Walsh's pitching. Two of them were crippled for swinging with the count three balls and one strike. Just why any batter should wait on "Big Ed" is not made clear. Mr. Walsh has been known on occasion to hit on a batter and then strike him out with three pitches. The policy of the wise batsmen has always been to hit whatever they think they can reach the ball to hit. It's foolish to "wait out" a pitcher whose control is no greater than Ed's. It would be equally foolish in the case of Mordecai Brown or Christy Mathewson.

The tirades pulled off by Manager Wallace and Pitcher Hedges of the Browns last Winter are turning out to be a joke. "Nig" Clarke, secured from Cleveland in exchange for Gregg, is still the best catcher the Mound City team has had since the days of Jack O'Brien. The Cleveland has asked for waivers on Griggs. Griggs is a southpaw who slowly but surely the Browns. Harstell is also doing well enough to hold down a regular berth. Infielder Hedges has a days been a good deal better than he showed in his first few games, but he hasn't a better ball club to shoot for his targets at.

Hub Perdue has never seen Ty Cobb play and will have his first look at The Peach this afternoon. Hub is a warm admirer of Joe Jackson, the White Sox outfielder. League with him last season. Mr. Perdue doesn't see how anybody could have it on Jackson as an all-around ball player and is mighty anxious to take a slant at Ty Cobb. Who doesn't? Cobb is entitled to the honor of being the best in the land. "I'll have to show me," says Hub.

The Tigers could use George Suggs this season. George is pitching some good ball for Griffith's team. In fact, he is about the best man in the pitching department. He

LATE LAST NIGHT IT WAS RUMORED THAT "EAGLE BEAK" HAD BEEN LOCKED IN A CLOSET BY HIS MOTHER EARLY YESTERDAY AFTERNOON FOR WEARING HIS HAT IN THE PARLOR.

ORIGINAL HAND MADE CARTOON BY SHRIMP FLYNN, ILLUSTRATING THE UMPERINERS VICTORY OVER THE STARFISH GIANTS IN YESTERDAYS GAME.
NOTE—SHRIMP NEVER TOOK A LESSON IN HIS LIFE, IN FACT HE DOES NOT EVEN KNOW HOW TO PUT AN ARTISTS POINT ON A LEAD PENCIL.

We are ashamed to call yesterdays doings a ball game. During all our experience we have never seen a more one sided affair. The Umperiners simply walked off with everything. The score that they piled up totaled 36, and they allowed only nine of the Starfish Giants to cross the platter in plain English, the score was 36 to 9. Brick" Spruder and played for his team, "Hook" Nelson, manager and captain of the Starfish Giants, yesterday, there would have been an entirely different story to tell. But again he was not there specially.

The Starfish Giants and Umperiners are neck and neck in championship games. Each team has won two and lost one. Although the average column figures show that both teams are tied, the opinion around the neighborhood seems to be that they are having a streak of hard luck, and that when it is over they will settle down and clean up. In our opinion, all the hard luck seems to be centred around "Eagle Beak" Sprudher, their wonderful pitcher. Somehow or other, something always happens to him. About three weeks ago, when he was under contract to receive ten cents a game for pitching, he ate a lot of ice cream sandwiches and dill pickles, which he bought with the first money he received from his job. This happened just the day before there was a hard game on. When the game was played he was home, sick in bed.

A few days after that he stayed out of a game because "Skiny" Shaner, his manager, could not scrape up his pay when he wanted it. That meant another default for his team. At another time, if we remember rightly, Emily Morton made a date out of him and planned a bunch of flowers on his shirt front, under his nose. Although he did his best he could not pitch at all that day, as the flowers tickled him in the nose and spoilt his aim. Then, just the other day, "Hook" Nelson's goat got his goat, and after throwing the ball over the fence and doing a lot of foolish things like that he handed another game to the Umperiners.

Yesterday's game was a very important one. Where was "Eagle Beak" Sprucer / Home, locked in a closet, being taught manners by his mother when he ought to have been playing ball.

As far as we can see "Eagle Beak" is the only one who is having real, genuine hard luck. Of course, "Skinny" Shaner is coming in for his share also, as he has to depend on "Eagle Beak."

Wonders of the Fairy Tale

By SIGMAR MEHRING

THE world of the child is narrow. It takes in only what the eye sees. This world is enlarged to the child when it hears the first fairy tales. What it then hears it has not seen with its own eyes. Must still the tale must have connection with something it has seen or the child will not be able to understand it. The child grows and the circle of things seen widens and with this also the circle of tales, which carry further its experiences. The child is now old enough to ask for fairy tales.

What is a fairy tale? A tale of the wonderful? If you were to ask a child this question it would be unable to understand or answer you. If it were able to answer the question it would have to be so far advanced mentally that it realized the mysterious effect of the fairy tale. It would then probably deny that it was the wonderful that made the tale so charming, for to the child, everything in the fairy tale is true. child, everything Giants and dwarfs? Why should there not be such people? Does it not live among giants? Every grown person is a giant to the child. And the very small sisters and brothers are the dwarfs. And the dear aunt, who always brings a present, when she comes, is the good fairy, while the other aunt, who always says "don't" is the bad fairy.

The child knows no wonders. As it looks upon the surprises of life, day and night, Summer and Winter, excursions and change of home, lay, even births and deaths in the family without wondering, so the miracles of the fairy tales appear quite natural to it. The wonder of the fairy tale is that the child sees nothing wonderful in it.

This is what those teachers should realize who nowadays raise their voices against the custom of telling children fairy tales. They fear an over-excitement of the imagination and inducement to over-excitement. The reply may be found in the words of Grimm Brothers, whose collection of fairy tales are read all over the world. In their preface they say: "Rain and dew fall as a blessing upon everything which grows on earth. He who dares not expose his plants to these, because they are too sensitive and might suffer, but prefers to sprinkle them with tepid water in a room, will hardly demand that rain and dew should cease to exist."

Children should get used to rain and dew in their mental evolution. If they are healthy the time will come when they will lay aside the fairy tales and enjoy only stories more in accord with their own experiences—stories which their awakening critical sense tells them are likely to be true.

It has been shown that fairy tales wander from people to people, from one country to another and with very small alterations are the common property of all mankind.

The latest researches have shown that these wanderings of fairy tales have been going on for thousands of years and that in the course of time they have undergone certain changes—everything has been left out of them which would not be understood by the generation growing up. In other words, people in their period of childhood would not recognize wonders in fairy tales. What appeared credible to an earlier, more childlike generation, the following criticised and expurged, and the teller of fairy tales in a more advanced period left out those things told him by his predecessors which did not agree with his own experience.

To love the fairy tales because of their wonders was given only to people of the latest generations, and had not this love of the wonderful come just when it did our whole treasury of fairy tales, handed down from generation to generation, would surely have been lost forever. The invention of the printing press became dangerous to the tellers of fairy tales. The printed word caused memory to be neglected.

Had anyone dared to collect fairy tales during the Fifteenth or even the Sixteenth Century, our treasure of wonderful stories would have been far richer than it is now. The gathering of tales should have been undertaken before books were known. Had the plundering of them hurried before the printing press our literature would have been wonderfully enriched. In the present day research sings to and examines every word of fairy tales. They are known as testimony from a world that has disappeared.

Articles found in ancient tombs are explained by the knowledge of bygone people we got from them. On these a whole lost world is reconstructed, but even here we can see that the greatest charm of fairy tales are not their wonders, but their realities.

A Successful Wife

"HOW do you like it, Esther?"

"Oh, I couldn't answer him! It was all I could do to keep my balance, but he asked me this question over so many times that I answered without thinking.

"Why, I'll have to get used to it."

And he exclaimed, delighted: "You shall get used to it! You shall! Look at me," he ordered like a master, and made me meet his eyes; his own were clear like brown pools, and there were tears back of the shine. I hoped he wasn't going to cry —I couldn't have stood it.

"In Albany you say that you came to tell me that you were not the kind of a woman for me, and I ran to New York to tell you that you are the one kind of woman I want, even if you haven't been able to find the man in me! Any other woman in the world but you would have put me in a straitjacket a year ago. Your courage, your divine patience, have got been in vain."

But I hadn't been through what I had been or up to Albany to say what I had for nothing, said, watching my face and not finding what he wanted there, he said, more excitedly:

"It isn't my nature to make a lot of threats about what I shall do if you leave me. I understand your character too well to imagine that if you leave me you will care what I do or where I go. I don't put a pistol to my head. It's not my way."

Asked to Wait

He leaned over to me and said, very low: "I'm just going to say one word" * * *

With all my might I longed to tell him not to go on; that I was determined —determined to leave him and lead my own life, but it was growing harder every single second, and the longer he looked at me out of his changed eyes the more impossible it was for me to speak.

"* * * Wait!" he whispered, down deep, as if it came from his heart. "Wait! You've done a great deal for me —it's my turn. I promise nothing—I assure nothing—but I want to see what I can do—for you—Wait!" He looked as if he expected to show me a miracle. "You don't understand what all this means, my dear girl—you don't, of course, understand."

He grew very pale, and put his hand up to his hair and bit his lips a little, and then said, slowly:

"It will be a hard, hard fight."

"No." I said, "I don't understand how any living man can be sure of himself."

And he answered me. "Because I am sure of my wife."

I didn't answer. For a while I looked out of the window over toward the river. There were two black yachts going down the bay: I watched them going around the curve of the hill. I heard my husband's voice.

"Can't I touch you, Esther? Won't you call up the imagination you have and understand the importance of this moment?"

And I recollected that he called me cruel once, and said that I was cruel to everybody but him, so I was just real mean and said: "You have told me lots of times that I have no imagination—nothing but common sense."

He exclaimed, eagerly: "There's no place for common sense here now; it has its place, but common sense would make you deaf and dumb to me, and I'm afraid of it. All ask you to do is to imagine the enormity and the importance of the moment."

Oh, of course I understood what he meant, and that to reach this point meant a new life for him. And I tried to say: "For me a new life as well."

After a second he whispered: "Just where are you in your well-ordered, well-regulated mind, my dear girl?"

I didn't know he had such a voice as the one he spoke to me in. I was surprised to see him kneel down by my side. I was embarrassed; he was so changed by his shaven face and his close-cut hair, it was like a strange man. The wave that had risen up in Albany seemed to have gone all over him and washed him clean. But I held back from him, I didn't want him to touch me then. I was too full 'way down deep of something else that I should have to bury, cover over, forget; and he showed his good sense—he didn't touch me; he had great delicate taste and feeling about everything when he was himself. I knew then that I was seeing him as other women had seen him, who had been carried away by him, and it gave me a new idea of my husband. It was a little bit the way I felt that day down in Nassau street, when I carried him his umbrella and he took hold of my arm and looked at me. But I thought to myself: "If he kisses me or says anything sentimental, I can't bear it!" But he just knelt there quietly, and leaned his head against the arm of my chair.

Would Begin Again

The room whirled. I saw all over the river and from the factories, and I saw my bag over there on the bed, and knew I should unpack it and begin again. Then my husband got up and said to me:

"Before you came in I paid up Mrs. Howland's bill. I told her we were going away this afternoon. She took me for a new lodger when I came in without my beard. We are going down to Washington. I have telegraphed for rooms at the Shoreham Hotel. Mr. Roxburg is down there and I join him to-morrow."

I didn't say anything one way or another, but I got up and began to get ready to go down to lunch.

"How long will it take you to pack up, Esther?"

And I recollected how he had put the same question to me at Paul Smith's after the other tragedy, but I was hard yet—hard, and couldn't bring myself to make him say right.

"The next train has a dining-car," he went on, as though he didn't expect me to answer him, "and if you could start for the things in on a rush, why, I'd send for a cab immediately. I don't believe we care much about lunching here, Esther, do we?"

Then I understood that he was ashamed to meet Mrs. Howland and the others, and the scene broke in me a little, and I felt sorry for him. I told him I could get ready all right, and that he had better go and send for the cab right away.

What could I do?

Things that flow along smoothly aren't so easy to recall as hard parts. In Washington we had rooms in a house in M street. I didn't know a single soul and hadn't anything to do, so I had time to remember Miss Pagee's nails, and I got a set of manicure things and did mine.

The first Sunday after we got to Washington my husband and I went to St. James's Church, as he said it was the finest little church, with pretty windows and a beautiful service. Senator Roxburg sat in a pew near the President. My husband pointed him out to me.

"Just across the aisle from Mr. Roxburg," my husband said, "sits his arch enemy. Can you see him, Esther?"

It was Senator Bellers. They were hontoning the Creed. I always liked the Episcopal Creed and the service. We were married by it in Trinity, and my people had always been Episcopalians.

Senator Roxburg and Senator Bellers represented the two big factions in the Senate, and though they said the same things in church, they said very different ones outside, though they were both in the same party.

The church was packed full, and we sat for luck and looked down on it all.

They sang "The Church's One Foundation," and it gave me a shaky feeling; I wished I could sing. I was surprised to hear Mr. Kirkland sing, holding the book up and singing right out as though he were a convert at a revival meeting. People near us turned and looked at him. He didn't sing the last hymn, and I was relieved, because his voice was loud in carrying.

On the way home my husband talked to me about his admiration for Senator Roxburg.

"It's the turn of the wheel, my dear girl; we were in the last row of the gallery to-day. Wait ten years. Roxburg can get along without me. I won't let him. There's a talent in seizing opportunities, and I have gripped this one, Roxburg," my husband continued, "started in a grocer's store, and to-day he sways the Senate every time he speaks. I've run up constantly against my uncle, and he is as cold to me as death; but I have no favors to ask of him."

Aunt Cordelia's Appearance Gets Lysander John Into the Family Circle

BECAUSE of the presence of a guest at the Appleton home, Lysander John is permitted to take part in the family discussions and encouraged to walk into the parlor, as if he were not afraid.

Aunt Cordelia Dudlin had been there two weeks, he had lost so much of his timidity he didn't look apologetic when he sneezed, and no longer cowered behind his hand.

Jasper Mayme and Chauncey Devere were absent from home one evening, when in the boldness of his temporary emancipation, Lysander John startled his wife and guest by asking this question: "Are children worth raising?"

After he had asked for it the old look of nervous fear came over his face, but it was without reason, for instead of his question meeting a rebuff, it met with respectful and thoughtful consideration.

"They step on your toes when they are little," said Aunt Cordelia, "and step on your heart when they are big."

"I thought, when I let the children make and pies on the parlor chairs, when they were little," said Mrs. Appleton, "I was an ideal mother, and they have had their arm slipped around her neck.

The cruel, heartless villain has tied Claude fast to the front of the aeroplane and started the machine full speed toward the jagged face of the cliff. Desmond and Gonsalvo, overlooking not to be mixed up in the crash, are tangling into the water. In a case like this, they think it is more blessed to give than to receive.

If Claude hits those rocks, it's a most certainty that he will either be killed outright or at least crippled for life. But, of course, we can't allow anything like that to happen. Claude is the hero of this little drama, and it's up to us to see that he gets out of every scrape we get him into. But it's no easy matter.

Simrod Jones, the fiendish naturalist, who has already saved Rosamond from a watery grave, has an idea by which he thinks he can save Claude also. Taking careful aim with his trusty rifle, he fires shot after shot into the water. No, he is not trying to hit Claude. Whatever gave you any such idea as that?

The water is full of whales, as Simrod knows, and when the bullets begin to fall all about them, the mighty cetaceans begin to spout. They send up such powerful streams of water that they lift the aeroplane out of its course. If they can only keep it up, all may yet be well with our brave young hero.

By the time the aeroplane reaches the top of the cliff, Rosamond and Simrod Jones are on hand to grimace Claude. Imagine the joy of the lovers when each finds the other safe and sound. But now they must find Desmond and punish him as he deserves.

Alas! The villain has been too quick for them. He has rounded up the baddest from the Wild West show and is driving them toward the edge of the cliff. Claude and Rosamond must choose between being trampled to death by the buffaloes or being swallowed alive by the whales. Sunday's pictures will show what choice they make.

When the Noisy Neighbor Moved

Moffitt's Phonograph Proved Too Much for the Piano—at Least He Thought So.

By KENNETT HARRIS.

"WELL, that beats the band," exclaimed Mr. Moffitt, laying down his book and starting from his chair. "I'm going to see about this. It's got to a point where something's got to be done."

"Sit down, Wilson," cooed Mrs. Moffitt. "You can't do anything except make a fuss and have things worse than ever. They've got a right to use their piano, and to sing, too."

"They don't use it," declared Mr. Moffitt, "they abuse it, and if you call that caterwauling singing! I was hoping that after that note we would have a little peace."

"I warn't," said his wife. "You remember I advised you not to send any note."

"I'd like to know why. I didn't say anything that wasn't perfectly polite and reasonable. If they hadn't a spark of decency or consideration for others they'd have stopped making a nuisance of themselves. But they haven't. They're a low lot, a noisy—well, it's up to us to make the next move now. I've tried to be neighborly and decent, and now I'm through."

"Sit down, Wilson," Mrs. Moffitt repeated, firmly. "Tell me what you are intending to do."

"I'm going to have them arrested, that's what I'm going to do. They're a common nuisance and I'm going to have them abated and in mighty short order. I'm going over to the police station, if you want to know."

"Sit down, Wilson," commanded his wife, and Mr. Moffitt sat down.

She Warns Her Husband.

"You're going to make yourself ridiculous," continued the lady. "You're going to get yourself in all the papers and me, too, and they'll only laugh at you and you'll never hear the last of it. They'll probably sue you for damages, too. I wish you wouldn't always be so impulsive. Now just think a little."

Mr. Moffitt got up and began to pace the floor. "If it was only once in a while, one might stand it," he said, "if they would only close their windows and put the soft pedal on, it would be something; if they would play something that sounded like music instead of a chanteuse, it might be endurable; or if they could play. But it's whang, bang, yippety-yip, whoop-ee, seven nights in the week and most of the day."

"Not as bad as that. Why, don't you shut the windows?"

"I don't see why we should be required to stifle themselves. Honestly, that sort of people is beyond me. How anybody can deliberately and knowingly make themselves offensive to other people, is the way they do, I can't think. If I were selfish enough to consider only my own pleasure or amusement, my sense of pride and a decent regard for the opinions of others would restrain me. They simply act like hogs—worse than hogs."

"It's a shame, and they certainly are not nice people," agreed Mrs. Moffitt, as she sat down in the nearest window.

"I'm going to do something," muttered Mr. Moffitt, savagely.

The following afternoon an express wagon stopped at the Moffitt's door and delivered a large sized phonograph. Mr. Moffitt had previously informed his wife of the purchase, by 'phone. She had remonstrated. "But, that's too awful for anything," she said.

"Just what we want," chuckled Moffitt, at his end of the wire. "I've bought it, anyway, so it's no use arguing the matter. Good bye."

Mr. Moffitt dropped the needle on the disc, directed the horn to the open window and—unfortunately for him—did not notice the number of the house.

"Play, weak. What is she like, this lady?"

"Middle-size — plentiful brown hair — eyes blue—beautiful in the cold English way, elegant, too—yet, a pretty woman—I saw her in Tarmoun——"

"Come with me"—and Janoc was in action, with a suddenness, a fury, a contrast with his previous stillness of listening, that was very remarkable—as if he had waited for the instant of action to sound, and then said: "Here it is! I am ready!"

Out stretched his long leg, as he bent forward into running, catching at his cap and revolver with one sweep of his right arm, and at Antonio with a snatch of the left; and from that moment his motions were in the tone of the fiercest marches of Napoleon—not an instant lost in the business he was at.

He took Antonio in a cab to Furneaux's house in Shelsley street. There he was nudged by Antonio, as they drove up, with a hysterical nob of "See! There she is!"

Rosalind was driving away at that moment. She had, then, seen Furneaux? told Furneaux? given Furneaux the dagger? In that case, the battle would lie between Furneaux and Janoc that day.

Janoc's face was pale, but it was the paleness of iron, his eyes were full of fire. In his heart he was a hero, in vain and in deed an assassin.

He alighted at the detective's house, letting Rosalind go. But he landingly of the fiat told him that Furneaux had not been at home for two hours, and was not expected for another hour.

Rosalind, then, had not seen him; and the battle swung back to its first ground as between Rosalind and Janoc.

Had the lady who had just called left any parcel, or any weapon for Mr. Furneaux? The answer was "No." He hurried down into his cab, to make for Rosalind's boarding-house.

But Antonio had not noted the number, and, to discover it, Janoc started off to Osborne's house, to ask it of Miss Prout.

Led By Impulse

Now, Rosalind was herself driving to the same place. On learning that Furneaux was not at home, she had paced his sitting room a little while, undecided whether to wait, or to leave a message and go home.

Then the new impulse had occurred to her to go to Osborne's in the meantime, and then return to Furneaux. Hylda Prout had contrived to put a lump in her throat and a firebrand in her bosom, an arrogance, a hot rancor.

How much of what the hussy had said against Osborne might contain some truth she did not know; it had so scorched her, and inflamed her gorge, and kindled her eyes, that she had not had time to question its probability in her preoccupation with the gall and smart of it.

But that Osborne should have opened the letter, and then written to say he had not—this was a villainy that the slightest reflection found to be incredible. The creature with the red hair certainly knew what was in the letter, but—might she not have opened it herself? And if any part of her statements were false, all might be false.

His impatience to see Osborne instantly seized and transported Rosalind. He had honest eyes—had she not whispered it many a time to her heart? She hurried off to him. . . . And by accident Janoc went after her.

Osborne himself had arrived home some ten minutes before this, after a very cold reception from Mrs. Marsh at Porchester Gardens.

As he entered the library, he saw Hylda Prout standing in the middle of the room with a face of ecstasy which astonished him. She, lately arrived back from her visit to the Italian, had heard him come, and had leapt up to confront him, her heart galloping in her throat.

"Anything wrong?" he asked with a quick glance at her.

"Miss Marsh has been here."

"Ah? . . . Miss Marsh?

She made a mad step toward him. The words that she uttered rasped harshly. She did not recognize her own voice.

"I told her straight out that it is not the slightest good her running after you."

"Yo utold her what?"

Amazement struggled with indignation in his face. All the world seemed to have gone mad when the pale, studiously sedate secretary used such words of frenzy.

"I meant to stop—her pursuit of you. . . . Mr. Osborne—how me—I—I——"

Excessive emotion overpowered her. In attempting to say more she panted with distress.

"What is it all about, Miss Prout? Calm yourself, please—be quiet——" he said it with some effort to express both his resentment and his kindness.

"Mr. Osborne—I warn you—I cannot endure—any rival——"

"Who can't? You speak of a rival?"

"Oh, Heaven, give me strength—words to explain. Ah!

Fall In a Faint

She had been standing with her left hand resting on a table, shivering like a sail in the wind, and now the hand and body gave way under her, and she sank after it, falling to the ground in a faint, while her head struck the edge of the table in her descent.

"Well, if this isn't the limit," muttered Osborne, as he ran to her, calling loudly for Jenkins. He lifted her to a sofa, and, in his flurry, not knowing what else to do, wet her forehead with a little water from a carafe. Jenkins had not heard his call, and by the time he looked round for a bell to summon help, her eyes unclosed themselves, and she smiled at him.

"You are there . . . ."

"Miss Prout—what——" He sat on a chair at her head, looking down on her, wondering what inane words he should use to extricate both himself and her from an absurd position.

"It is all right. . . . I must have fainted. I have undergone a great strain, a dreadful strain. You should be sorry for me. Oh, I have loved much."

"Miss Prout——"

"No, don't call me that, or you kill me. You should be sorry for me, if you have any pity, any shred of humanity in your heart. I have—passed through flames, and drank of a cup of fire. Ten women, yes, ten—have hungered and wailed for me. I tell you—yet to whom should I tell it but to you?"

She smiled a ravished smile of pain; her hand fell upon his heavily; her restless head swung from side to side.

"Well, I am very sorry," said Osborne, forced to gentleness in spite of the anger that had consumed him earlier. "It is impossible not to believe you sincere. But, you will admit, all this is very singular and unexpected. I am afraid now that I shall have to send you on a trip to—switzerland; or else go myself. Better you—it is chilling there, on the glaciers."

Yet the attempt at humor died when he looked at her face with its languishing, sick gaze. Its expression of swooning luxury. She sighed deeply.

"No, you cannot escape me now, I love you, you—you," she panted. "There are powers too profound to be run from when once at work, like the suction of whirlpools——"

"If you don't love me, my love is a force enough for two, for a thousand. It will draw and compel you. Yes, I think so. It will either warm you, or burn you to ashes—and myself, too. Oh, I swear to heaven! It will, it shall! You shouldn't have pressed my hand that night."

"Pressed your hand! on which night?" asked Osborne, who had now turned quite pale, and wanted to run quickly out of the house, but could not.

A Bewitched Woman

"What, have you forgotten?" she asked with tender reproach gazing into his eyes; "the night I was going to see my brother nine months ago, and you went with me to Euston, and in saying good-by you——"

She suddenly covered her eyes with her fingers in a rapture at the memory.

Osborne stared blankly at her. He recalled the farewell at Euston, which was accidental, but he certainly had no memory of having pressed her hand.

"I loved you before," her lips just whispered in a pitiful assumption of confidence, "but timidly, not admitting it to myself. With that pressure of your hand I was done with maidenhood, my soul rushed to you. After that you were mine and I was yours."

The words almost fainted on her bitten under lip, and in Osborne, too, a rush of soul, or of blood, took place, a little flush of his forehead. It was a bewitching woman who lay there before him, with that fair freckle-splashed face couched in its cloud of red hair.

"Come, now," he said, valiantly striving after the commonplace, "you are ill—you hardly know yet what you are saying."

She half sat up suddenly, bending eagerly toward him.

"Is it pity? Is it love?"

"Please, please, let us forget that this has ever——"

"You could be free instantly but for that Tormouth girl. Oh, drive her out of your mind! That cannot be—I could never, never permit it. For that reason alone—and besides, you are about to be arrested——"

"I?"

"Yes; listen. I know more of what is going on than you know. The man Furneaux, who, for his own reasons, hates you, and is eager to injure you, has even more proofs against you than you are aware of.

"I happen to know that in his search of your trunks he has discovered something at other which he considers conclusive against you. And there is that housemaid at Feldsham Mansions, who screamed out 'Mr. Osborne did it!'—Furneaux only pretended at the inquest that she was too ill to be present, because he did not want to produce the whole weight of his evidence just then. But he has her, too, safe up his sleeve, and she is willing to swear against you.

To Be Continued Monday.

Attractive Ways to Serve Strawberries

THE expert hostess, especially if she likes strawberries better than does the rest of the family, rarely serves them twice in the same way.

For breakfast she uses them on the bull, massed on a mound of sugar with a border of cream. The strawberry fork is sometimes used, but epicures prefer eating them from the hull.

For a first course at luncheon serve the berries in sherbet glasses with a maraschino sauce, or combined with pineapple and thin slices of banana. The fruit should be prepared at least an hour before the meal, sugared and well chilled.

Newer than the compote as a first course are timbale cases filled with big berries heaped with powdered sugar.

Strawberry shortcake is good. Constant warfare is waged between shortcake made from biscuit dough and that from cake batter. Both are palatable, but the former should be really short and the cake not the plain variety too often used. Choose a rich cottage pudding batter or, better yet, use the one, two, three, four recipe, which is known to most cooks.

The secret of the fluffy shortcake is to have half the berries sugared and crushed for filling. This is also used on the top layer, topped by whole berries.

Plenty of rich cream is good with shortcake, but a scanty supply is trying, and it will go further when whipped. A saucer of strawberries and a syrup of boiled sugar and water make an agreeable change. Sometimes cherry is used for flavoring.

Must Make Allowances.

"Mrs. Newrich has no idea as to how to treat her inferiors."

"Well, you must remember that it's only been a few months that she had any."

"HANGED? Yes! They hang women, I know, in England—the only country in Europe—this ugly nest of savages. Yes! they hang them by the neck on the gallows there—the gallant gentlemen! But they won't hang her, Antonio! Let them touch her, and I, I set all England dancing like in sandstorm of the Sahara! Furneaux's house No. 127?"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

NOT WOMAN'S PLACE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX.

Which is correct? A girl to ask a man to go out for a short walk in the evening, or should she wait until the man suggests it?

Also, may a girl ask a man to take her in a dance, when she has the tickets, and knows him only for a short while?

Do you think the man could take it amiss, if she asked him?

H.

IT is woman's place to be sought after and she should therefore be asked by the man to take a walk or go to a dance. This is easily explained by the position women hold in life, and by their nature.

YOU MISJUDGE HER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX.

I am nineteen and away from home, at college.

There is a young woman, one year my junior, who, I am confident, loves me. She, however, seems to me too anxious for my attention.

I do love her, but do not want to seem as though I was willing to take any girl that came along.

I haven't written to her this entire school year. How should I now begin, so that it will not appear as I want? I do love her but, as yet, no mention of engagement has been made.

A LOVER.

A MAN who really loves a woman could never think her so low as to run after him.

You certainly must have misjudged the actions of this girl, therefore you need better make reparation by showing her real love and respect.

Write her in friendship and dismiss at such feelings as you have had control from your mind.

UNFAIR TOWARD BOTH

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX.

I am twenty-two and have known a young man the same age for three years.

At the beginning he always hinted, but never openly proposed to me. He had a brother who visited me and proposed. I kept company with him six months.

While I was keeping company with him one day other brother became engaged and I then broke the engagement.

Kindly advise me how to get the first brother back.

T. K. P.

IF you really loved the first young man you would could have become engaged to his brother.

You have not acted fairly either toward him or his brother, and you will undoubtedly have to suffer for your conduct.

You are evidently not certain which one you like, and you cannot renew your acquaintance with the first young man until he desires it. To regain his love you would have to prove that your feeling toward him was really sincere.

Anty Drudge Tells How to Prevent Laundry Mistakes.

Jones—"Heavens, Jemina! Look what came back from the laundry! Three pairs of women's stockings and five petticoats. Why I've got some woman's laundry instead of my own."

Anty Drudge—"I'll tell you how to avoid mistakes like that. Get Fels-Naptha soap and have your things washed the easy way at home. They'll be cleaner and fresher and wear twice as long and then you won't get them mixed with other people's clothes."

You owe it to yourself and your folks to use Fels-Naptha.

You owe it to yourself to cut down the time of washing clothes one-half, to save yourself its drudgery, to make it easier and more pleasant all around.

You owe it to your folks to quit making washday a day of cold meals, steamy and smelly house and general bad temper.

Fels-Naptha does it, summer or winter—washes all the clothes in cool or lukewarm water, without boiling, in little time, with no hard rubbing, and makes them cleaner, whiter and sweeter than any other way.

SENATE LAGS ON RECIPROCITY

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES
Editorial Correspondent of the American.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—La Follette is a loose issue—if he is a loose, which yet remains to be seen.

If we blot from the record his single act of voting for the Root amendment, designed to rob a free press of the benefits of reciprocity and designed as well to kill the reciprocity bills—which is the hopeful object of the tariff reform for which to-night his earliest and bravest battles—blot this inconsistency from his progressive and aggressive record, and Robert La Follette remains the one dauntless, unshaken, consistent figure of Republican insurgency.

The wave that rolled in Wednesday to the feet of Taft bearing as flotsam and jetsam of the political waters the shining figures of Borah and Cummins and the lesser insurgents may recede before another Wednesday, leaving the Presidential beach as smooth for La Follette as it is for Taft.

LaFollette is playing a net game with a bold stroke and the master cards are still in his hand.

Even the strange attitude of the Wisconsin Senator on the Canadian bill in this game. What LaFollette wants is to flip the whole tariff question over again in a series of operations to-day, to-morrow, next week, next month, next year, and, if possible, to connect the President with the unpopular phases of the antireciprocity agencies that defeated the bill or the President's foes will all be driven away from the reciprocity issue with the thrilling of LaFollette eloquence flashing in the eyes of the Nat onal Republican Convention.

Leader of Insurgents.

The Wisconsin statesman so easily made the insurgent rival, as he is the insurgent idol, is in his own manner by discounting the personal hopes of his former.

And yet the Senator has, of strange and the Borah, Borah is a number and a statesman. But he has also a full share of personal ambition, and while his masterful attitude strengthens the reciprocity cause it increases his influence. It means the pilotage through importunes and shoals.

Cummins, in point of pure intellect is of higher caliber than Senator Borah or La Follette, but he lacks the fire and force of the resistless purpose of the other.

The purpose of the group surrounding Cummins is as the northern sea to the sea.

There is not in the whole Senate chamber a blot or a prophecy as to when the critical hour is to have an end.

Adjournment is not a matter of personal discussion. Like a tidal wave it is rolled into languid quality and is distinctly fascinating to stay.

The truth is that the lethal conflicts of the Senate cannot be settled by the calendar of legislation into easy personal channels that mention persons in votes. There is not a Senator in the chamber who has at home business at stake, even if there are those who have political fortunes at magnificent issues.

Wide windows and abundant ventilation. Luxurious couches, electric fans with motor-fold seat comforts, and with all of this great government surrounds its distinguished lawmakers. Time made an extra session no longer dreaded.

Easy Job for Senators.

There are a full score of professional Senators who have no other business and no other employment than the earlier.

One of these said to me:

"I don't care if this session never ad journs. I wish it ran from December to December, with a month's vacation for business holiday. I have nothing else to do but legislate, as there is no other so comfortable as this earldom."

Sentiments like these make a question whether the rude simplicity of the Fathers would not be more conducive to better and more industrious purpose than the smiling splendors of the Senate of to-day.

And so the matter of adjournment is a matter of mere drift; no man mentions an earlier date than July 1, and the session is dragging easily forward to October, in spite of the fact that the Democratic caucus on reciprocity two other day, one Senator named Lafe 15. Another calendar proposed August 1.

Thirty Speeches in Sight.

Well, it is said that there will be thirty speeches on reciprocity. Some of these have already spoken two days, and declares that he has only just begun. Bailey is expected to continue three days and Lafollette five.

Cummins will ask for two days, and Borah hints of three. The reciprocity speeches, it is expected, will be by all American and European records.

Haught exhausted.

It is easy to see how thirty days can be spent.

Of course, there is no need in this. It is a mere wanton waste of time. There is not a Senator who has not made up his mind, or who has not put all he needs to say in two hours or three at the most.

The professional Senator has settled down to a comfortable enjoyment in Washington, as he doesn't seem to care how long the business is postponed, and the people left unsatisfied.

The Senate, lagging shamefully six weeks behind the Industrious House, does not sit more than two hours every day, twenty-four and yesterday it adjourned again until Tuesday night.

Think of it—how long, Catiline, will then thus abuse our patience.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Announcement will be made to-day by Atchison Railroad directors' sanity of $30,000,000 appropriated for double track ing in the Southwest. This money is to be expended as rapidly as possible, for the agricultural outlook in the Atchison territory is such as to convince the executive officers the road will be unable to handle the business offered unless facilities are increased immediately. The tracks already has made some quick time between Chicago and the Pacific coast, than any other of the Pacific roads. It is doing a profitable business, splendidly managed and its record is of the best.

Tennessee Copper is active under the influence of the announcement to be made in a few days of completion of the sulphuric acid plant and the Ducktown Agricultural Company and the election to the Tennessee board of three representatives of the National City Bank.

In connection with the latter action is noted the fact that the South uses nearly 1,250,000 tons of fertilizer annually. The sulphuric acid necessary to make this tonnage very largely from Ely Tintic. The Tennessee Copper Company's contract with the International Agricultural Corporation compels the latter to take from one to day it produced, and the copper company is under contract to deliver the same and will increase its output as rapidly as possible to a total of nearly 32 a ton on this acid. This, together with the large profits derived from the refinement of the company, will give the company a handsome profit in excess of about $1,000,000, which is equal to 20 per cent on the stock, or $2 a year per share. Its shares being $25 par. The bonds of the Ely Mines is classified as a part of Tennessee Copper and I. C. Copper. Its output is controlled by the International Agricultural Corporation, so that the two companies represent the profits of high grade.

Announcement that President Taft had ordered the Secretary of War to begin withdrawal of troops from the Mexican border is one of the most important factors in the Southern Pacific, for it means that peace has been established in Mexico. The Southern Pacific has 1,000 miles of mileage in Mexico. Another favorable indication for Southern Pacific is the report that the earnings are still gaining. For the first several million more of last load in the month of May will be fully 2 of old cut of Congress continuing all three quizes on the Southern Pacific is saved by the sanity of authorities, and a new act of Congress could easily provide a solution for the case of the United States, which has spring ing up in the past few months, and which, by no law shall be passed to do so. It is probable Senator Lodge will introduce the bill.

Third Avenue stock jumped up to $14.50 bid on the official announcement that the Appellate division of the Supreme court had reversed the decision of the Public Service Commission ordering to assess the value of the property. This decision suggests an early settlement of the traction situation, and with the appointment of the receiver have proved that the people of Boston have confidence in the Huckleberry road, by reason of the rapid development of the territory and the increased population which is giving it power. The enjoyment of the entire system is significant that in spite of the future directors let the stockholders share in its earnings two new quarterly dividends of 1 per cent, which should be good investments. Present Third Avenue stock, however, is not of the class for investment, all the good things that can be said of the company.

The expenditure of $30,000,000 by Atchison for double tracking, and is only one of the numerous large orders that are being placed by railroads. Railroad buying for rails promises to be record-breakers in the near future, especially in view of the fact of the reasons why Steel is so stubbornly strong is the fact that orders are coming in so rapidly. Having knowledge of this new move in the Atchison, important lighting interests are not persons when the market is attacked because of rise of rate in the winter wheat, cotton and corn belts. Rain is badly needed in certain sections, but the damage from the crops is such as to justify expectation of a tonnage at least as large as that of last year. In the case of Atchison a very large proportion of the tonnage is from irrigated land, so that rain does but mal ter.

A man who has money to invest in Erie stocks has a selection to fit his purse and desires not unlike that displayed on a counter of a department store, where different grades of the same article at prices of $1.50 and $3.50 are offered. The price Erie common was quoted at 30¾, the second preferred at 46¾, and the first preferred at 53¾. It was only a long penary coincidence that exactly ten points separated each issue, but it made the price relation among them easy to remember. Both of the preferred issues are entitled to 4 per cent, when the company is paying dividends of the market pays a return of $10 a share on the first preferred a price similar to a share of the earnings.

With only May and June to pull it out of the red, the St. Paul system ended the first ten months of the fiscal year with net earnings of $3,268,604 less than its interest and dividend requirements. Only the last word in railroad phenomena can suffice to make the property to reach June 30 with a small surplus. Large as the deficit is the 7 per cent, dividend on the preferred stock, however, are confident that the dividend rate will not be reduced at the next distribution, and that another six months will see the balance on the right side of the ledger through the beneficent offices of good crops and good business.

BOSTON MARKET CLOSES STRONG

STATE STREET, June 10.—Closing—Both the New York and Boston markets closed strong after a day's trading in which many stocks showed considerable strength and others sent to new high records. Among these were Erie, Missouri, Kansas & Texas and Canadian Pacific. Southern Railway preferred also continued its upward move, crossing 71. This rise was based on the very satisfactory earnings and outlook for a large cotton crop.

There were recreations of the story about Canadian buying Erie, but the buying was a result of the favorable prospects of the property also becoming an independent proposition. Tennessee Copper advanced over a point because of the new deal with American Agricultural and the influence of Morgan in the company's affairs.

On the local board there was noticeable buying by small investors who seem to think that the copper market has turned the corner. Most every copper share showed an advance for the day. New Cornelia, however, being the exception, with a decline of a point. Most of the selling in this issue was from those who bought last week.

Directors of the Old Colony Copper Company have called an assessment of $1 per share, payable July 15 to stockholders of record June 27.

The weekly statement of averages of the Associated Banks of New York and Federal Reserve on all deposits increased $1,500, loans decreased $1,200,000, less than United States increased $1,500,155, loans increased $6,788,800, specie increased $4,-245,000, legal tenders decreased $272,100, deposits increased $10,502,000, circulation decreased $33,300.

CHANGES EFFECTED AT INFANTS' ASYLUM

The Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Infants Asylum has carefully investigated the affairs at the institution.

As a result of the investigation the board has made some important changes in the administration. Dr. Henry I. Bowditch has been appointed head physician and Dr. Arthur J. Kendall, an experienced bacteriologist, will devote considerable time to the final type of milk at the laboratory. The nursing force is still under the direction of Miss Alice M. Cheney as superintendent. Miss Matthewson, assisted by Miss Schindler, will have charge of the office affairs. The board learned that there are not enough hospital beds for infants and plans the present lacuna to be made. Besides the present building $12,000 is needed yearly to continue the work.

The People Can't Have a Parcels Post—Because the Private Express Companies Forbid It

The People Cannot Have Reciprocity, Apparently, Because a Couple of Trusts Forbid It. Rather a Shock That Would Be to the Men of the Revolution That Planned for Government BY THE PEOPLE

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal-Examiner

Before long we will be celebrating the Fourth of July—the day set apart to celebrate the alleged INDEPENDENCE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

While getting ready to celebrate the Fourth, it would do no harm to think, without fireworks, how much or how little the independence of the American people really amounts to.

For instance, take the parcels post question. The people of the United States pay millions of dollars every year for free rural delivery routes. These are run at a loss—and the people pay the loss.

With a parcels post doing an express business with the people those routes would pay a PROFIT of many millions a year.

But the independent American people cannot have a public parcels post because private express companies forbid it. True as ever is the statement by John Wanamaker, made when he was Postmaster General, that the parcels post is made impossible by four reasons, and the name of each reason is the name of a private express company.

And then consider the effort to establish a reciprocity law with Canada.

That law would benefit this entire continent, and everybody on it—except the owners of a few selfish interests.

The President of the United States advocates the law, and he shows courage in doing so, since the credit for reciprocity, which is a step toward tariff reform, might go to the Democrats and the discredit and political damage might fall upon the President at the coming election.

In spite of the warnings of friends, Mr. Taft has used all of his power, and is now campaigning, making speeches before public bodies in favor of reciprocity. But AS MR. TAFT HIMSELF HAS SAID, MR. ROOT, WHO REPRESENTS THE PAPER TRUST, HAS MORE POWER IN THE MATTER THAN THE PEOPLE.

So you see that the business of Mr. Taft, elected by the people of the United States, is not at all to convince the people, but to find some way of preventing this one lawyer, Mr. Root, who all his life long has been in the pay of tricksters, big or little, beginning with Tweed and ending with the Traction Trust—the job of the President of the United States is to keep ONE lawyer hired by trusts from thwarting the will of all the people.

Think that over before the Fourth of July, and decide for yourselves whether it would not be a good idea to have another Declaration of Independence, a declaration to the effect that as the United States refused to be governed by an English king three thousand miles away, they should refuse to be governed by a money king here at home.

Bailey and Root, both corporation lawyers, both without a particle of public spirit, both indifferent to the public welfare, are able to offset the power of the people backed by the advocacy of the President.

And that is what we call an independent nation.

Women Are Going to Vote

Neither Jokes in Bad Taste Nor the Conceit of Ignorant Men Will Postpone Woman's Victory. Indefinitely.

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal-Examiner.

Two items of news appeared together concerning woman suffrage.

At Albany the advancement of a bill in favor of women was checked by that distinguished statesman, Senator Grady.

This distinguished intellectual light said of the effort to render justice to women, "This question has been treated as a sort of an ice-cream affair. It is time to tell these women the truth. We must get down to hard pan and stop this nonsense."

Grady, thanks to his place in the Senate, was able to prevent the advance of the Stilwell bill to the third reading. It is eminently proper that a man like Tom Grady SHOULD interfere with votes for women in the Senate. And the man can hardly be blamed for acting in self-defence. Certain it is that no intelligent woman would vote to send the Grady type of man to the Senate.

Mr. Grady may not know it, but he may learn from the experiments with female suffrage made in New Zealand and the United States that women rarely vote for drunkards or grafters—at least, when the candidate's character as such is thoroughly established.

We suppose that respectable women interested in the votes for women movement will not trouble to answer Mr. Grady's witticism comparing votes for women to "a sort of an ice-cream affair." They might if they chose remind the distinguished Senator from Tammany Hall that even an "ice-cream affair" is considerably better than a case of delirium tremens.

As an offset to the Tom Grady joke in the Legislature of New York State there comes better news from the Legislature of Connecticut. At Hartford the Senate, by a vote of fourteen to nine, passed an act which gives women the right to vote in town elections without regard to property qualifications. If this goes through the other branch of the Legislature the women of Connecticut will vote for every public official except the Governor of the State and the President of the United States, and that will be a step forward.

While the Connecticut Senate was voting in favor of women, the lower House in the Committee on Federal Relations, called upon the Connecticut Congressmen to do all in their power to secure the passage of the Parcels Post bill.

They seem to have some intelligent and honest men in Connecticut.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

OPPOSES FIFTY-YEAR LEASE

Editor AMERICAN:

I am opposed to a fifty-year lease to the Boston Elevated.

These are no times to give so valuable a franchise for so long a time.

Safeguard the public to the need of keeping such monopolies in hand.

The public highways belong to the people, and a fifty-year lease is as good as a life tenure.

We cannot afford to tie ourselves and a future generation up to that extent.

In these days of monopolies we must hold them in check, and that by a short lease, which will be and would best subserve the best interests of the public.

Hold on. Protect and make certain our rights.

MAX HENRY NEWMAN.

Boston.

WARNING TO MOTHERS

Editor AMERICAN:

The other day I passed a baby carriage in the street and in it was a child lying on its face. How easily such a child could be smothered in this way! Won't you please warn mothers of such carelessness toward their children? Yours, F. J.

No Mystery Is Too Baffling for Him

OH MR. SHERLOCKO,—I'M SO WORRIED ABOUT MY HUSBAND! HE GOT UP EARLY THIS MORNING TO SPADE THE GARDEN AND I HAVEN'T SEEN HIM SINCE!
NEVER FEAR, MRS. HENPECKO,—WE'LL FIND HIM!
YOUR HUSBAND IS AN ENTHUSIASTIC GARDENER THEN?
TAKE US TO THE GARDEN!
NO, THIS IS THE FIRST TIME HE HAS WORKED IN THE GARDEN VOLUNTARILY!
THIS MARK SHOWS WHERE HE DRAGGED HIS SPADE ALONG, BUT HE DID NO WORK!
HERE, BEHIND THE BARN, IS WHERE HE DID HIS DIGGING! WHAT DO YOU MAKE OF THAT, WATSO?
BURIED TREASURE?
AND HERE HE STOPPED TO CUT A SLENDER BRANCH FROM THIS TREE!—WATSO, LET US TAKE A WALK DOWN TO THE MILL-POND!
ANY LUCK, MR. HENPECKO?
DID SHE SEND YOU AFTER ME? WAS SHE VERY MAD?
I WOULDN'T BE IN YOUR SHOES!

The Age of Chivalry

By William Stevens

A maid, with face awry, turns from her task;
She dreams of long ago: And in her dream,
In Fancy's loom, she weaves in golden warp
With silver weft entwined, Romance of old.
O, Lady Fair, sigh not for armored knight,
To maim with maul and mace he did aspire.
With rapier thrust and spear, upon the field
In Honor's name, he let his comrade's blood!
For this he courted praise; and on the moat,
A rooster in an iron hide, he stalked,
To amorous smiles of lady-slaves enjoy.
Renounce this false and phantom chivalry;
For Then, as when Old Earth began,
Did You in Silence, Woman's burdens bear.
And Now, as Then, your gentler Voice tones not
The law to which your Nobler Spirit bends.
Oh, should this generation blush with shame—
Ten million Negro voices rise instead!
Ah! Gentle Lady, cleave unto thy task,
Thy love and care moves Man to better ways;
The Age of Chivalry is yet to come.

Little Bobbie

He Writes About Not Wasting Water

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

WHAT is the matter with you, husband, sed Ma to Pa wen he calm hoam last nite & brought hoam a frend of his which had long black whiskers. Thare is nothing the matter with me that I know of, sed Pa. Why? Oh, yure face is so long & sad looking, sed Ma, & who is yure frend with the fringe?

Oh, parding me, sed Pa, wife, I want you to meet my grate frend Mister Lobbygow of Springfield. Him & me went to skool together seers & yeers ago. He was the hanumest boy in the class, Pa sed. We all used to call him sunny Jim.

He looks moar like one of them litle gloops that Tom Powers drawes, sed Ma. Why doesnt he stand up until I ask him to be seeted? Pa's frend had fell carver into the morris chair, & was looking up at the ceeling & wiping his eyes with a blue handkerchief.

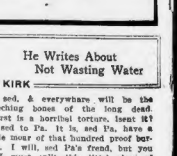
Poor feller, sed Pa, he is a scientist, & he is vary much worried about the alarming deekreese in the water supply all over the lot. He was fussing about it all the way up in the elevated, Pa sed, & I fear that that, with the extreem heat, has went to his hed a littel.

Woe is me, sed Mister Lobbygow. The water is rapidly going away. We are in the throes of a water famine, sed Mister Lobbygow, & I cant seem to lern jest what is causing it. Oh, deer lady, he sed to Ma, what do you supposa is causing it?

I dosnt know, sed Ma, but I dont think that you or my husband had much to do with any water famine. I havent known you as long as I have known my husband, sed Ma, but I am a good reeder of faces, & I think that if nobody consumed any moar water than you & my esteemed husband, thare wud be another deuge & we wud have to live in arks, Ma sed. Dinner is reddy, sed Ma, & has been reddy for two hours. I suppose you & yure frend must be vary hungry, because you certingly donut look thirsty. Wen Pa's frend & Pa sat down to the tabel & started to eat what was left of the dinner, Ma & me set in the other room & looked at the papers, but we cud heer all that Pa's frend was saying.

Woe is me, sed Mister Lobbygow, & woe is all of us. Inside of another yeer, or maybe sooner, he sed to Pa, this whole wunderful New England will be as dry as the desert of Sarah, he sed, & everywhare will be the bleeching bones of the long dead. Thirst is a horribel torture, Isent it? he sed to Pa. It is, sed Pa, have a little moar of that hundred proof burbon. I will, sed Pa's frend, but you & I must split this litlel glass of water between us. A full glass of burbon, half a glass of water, that is my motto, sed Pa's frend.

It is a very good & nobel motto.



sed Pa. I wish there was moar publick spirited men like you. Save the water for our wives & children, that is a grand watchword, sed Pa. Try sum moar of this hundred proof.

Well, martyrs, sed Ma, Isent it about time that you left the tabel & came into the living room, so littel Bobbie & I can reemove the dishes.

Right, sed Pa's frend, but I hoap, my deer madam, that you will be as careful as possibel, while washing the dishes, not to waste any of our precious water. New England needs every drop of it.

After Pa's frend had went hoam, Pa talked to Ma for a long time about beeing careful with the water supply, & then he went in to take a bath & went to sleep in the tub & left the water running for half a hour.

Esmeralda Emmeline

By KENNETT HARRIS

O'M, Esmeralda Emmeline, she gave me such a smile,
It set my heart a-beating with emotional rapidity;
I went my way exultingly, but in a little while,
My coursing blood subsided to its usual turgidity.
Reflection brought about a callosophical stolidity.
A chill went through the marrow of my bones,
The sweetness of sensation soured to actual acidity;
She smiled about as charmingly on Jones.

Oh, Esmeralda Emmeline, she wrote a dainty note,
And I was the recipient. It did seem very flattering;
But when I thought the matter out I called myself a goat.
I didn't care a snap about the sentimental smattering.
I'd noticed that such favors shed a little way of scattering.
The simper that I wore became a frown.
For lately, in particular, I'd found out from his chattering
She'd sent a dainty little note to Brown.

From Esmeralda Emmeline I had a lock of hair,
A flower from her bosom, which I cherished—temporarily,
But Smith had just such tokens and young Johnson used to wear
A picture in his watch-case that she gave him voluntarily.
You see she was free-hearted and bestowed things ordinarily
And said things that she didn't really mean.
That's why affection waned and why I do my wooing warily.
I once knew Esmeralda Emmeline.
